John New To Spend Summer As BSU Student Missionary

By GARY MAYFIELD Battalion Special Writer

"I feel a deep desire to help people in their physical infirmities and to relieve their physical suffering some in the name of Christ." John New, a sophomore prevet major from Longview, offered this statement of dedication to his work this summer as a Baptist Student Union summer missionary to South Texas.

The soft-spoken civilian Aggie will represent Texas A&M's BSU, along with another student, as one of 59 Texas college students serving as missionaries in 1968. New's football-playing 6-4, 240 pounds physique is overshadowed by his quiet disposition which emanates his love and devotion for the betterment of mankind.

"I'll be working as an assistant to a dentist abroad a traveling dental clinic which was built into an old renovated school bus," New said. "We'll be traveling around towns in the Harlingen area, including such small towns as Mission and Weslaco," he continued. "By helping to relieve their physical needs, perhaps I can reach the people spiritually," he went on. "I've seen through experience that people have been helped physically and it was just temporary.

"On the other hand, I've seen people helped physically and yet it didn't stop there. Workers dedicated to the cause have worked with these people and managed to reach them spiritually, giving them hope when they seemed to have nothing left," New said with an expression of sound triumph on his face. The 20-year-old New possesses what he believes to be the greatest ideal triumph—victory over death in the person of Jesus Christ, as revealed in the New Testament of the Bible. He firmly believes that he has a definite calling to be a missionary.

"The way I feel about missions in general is why I applied in the first place," he explained. "I hope eventually to go into the mission field after graduation from vet school.

"There are three types of missionaries: evangelistic, agricultural, and medical. After graduation with a doctorate in veterinary medicine, I hope to go into the field as an agricultural missionary," New said.

His face flushed with excitement at the thought of being a missionary, New explained that the dental clinic would not be operating full time this summer. "Although the majority of our work will be in the clinic," he said, "part of it will be dedicated to personal evangelism in connection with the churches."

New related another experience which also encouraged him to dedicate his life to helping the underprivileged people.

"In the summer of 1966, I took a vacation with my family to Mexico," he began. "Even in Mexico City I saw people living in mud houses. The best access they had to food was the numerous lizards that crawled the streets.

"And the land was about as fertile as a table top. As one result, I never saw a child with a smile on his face," he recalled.

"We stopped at the village Taxco, famous for its cathedral—an eight and one-half million dollar structure. One man had this built, just so these underprivileged people could look at 12 altars of solid gold, each 30-feet high!

"The main streets of this village are flanked with silver shops, containing beautiful wares of the craftsmen—the idealized picture of Mexico. Yet many people are starving to death.

Concerning necessary preparation for the summer missionary work, New will study for a week beginning June 3 in a training course with other missionaries at the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth.

Actual missionary work will occupy 10 weeks of the summer, beginning sometime in the middle of June and continuing through August 15.
