Creative Classes
Offer Challenge

Being Robin Hood, the Lone Ranger, Captain Blythe or Old Mother Hubbard might be the goal of some youngsters.

Bryan and College Station children will have the opportunity to be whomever they choose in creative dramatics classes this summer. Classes will be under the theater arts program of Texas A&M's English Department.

"What can the kiddos do?" asked C. K. Esten, director for the program. "That's what we are interested in. We are going to let them work on ideas. They can make their own costumes, dialogue and story. It's up to them. All we give is guidance."

Two summer sessions are set in both cities in conjunction with recreation councils. Fifteen students each will be accepted in four age groups: 5 to 6, 7 to 8, 9 to 10, and 11 to 12.

First session is June 12 to July 15, the second July 17 to August 16. Registration is free in Bryan. There is a $3 per child fee in College Station.

"There are no set plays for the children," Esten said. "We're after creativeness. Whetting their interest is our objective. You get kids interested and they will work like trojans. And chances are strong they will do a bang-up job."

Kathleen Heaton, Sam Houston State graduate, will work with Bryan youngsters in the Bryan Civic Auditorium.

Mrs. Ruth Reeves, whose background includes theater training under Professor Esten, heads the College Station group in the Fallout Theater Workshop of Guion Hall.

"Oh, we are not looking for any Shirley Temples or Jackie Coogans," Esten hastened to add.
"Personal development of players is our goal rather than satisfaction of a child audience. If presentations are made, they will be as demonstrations rather than performances."

Mommies and daddies are not welcome during their children's "hour upon the stage," he emphasized.

"Parents aren't allowed in the building," Esten said. "Generally, when parents come in, their kids either show off or freeze up. We don't want that. We let kids exploit their own ideas."

In creative dramatics as envisioned by Esten, children create a play based upon a story, wither original or from literature, history or other sources. A leader tells the story and helps children realize its dramatic possibilities.
They plan the play and act it with spontaneous dialogue and action. Only a small part of the play is done at one time. Each group evaluates work after each playing and gradually develops a complete play.

"We are not going to make the student into anything," Esten warned. "He will do it himself.
I'd much rather work with a kid than a piece of lumber. He's an entity. If he's mahogany, we'll try to make him into a piano.
Even if he's only kindling wood, that's something!"

Centrifugal Pumps
Presented To A&M

Four centrifugal pumps have been presented to Texas A&M's Industrial Engineering Department by the Ingersoll-Rand district office at Houston.

The pumps, capable of moving virtually any type of fluid, are valued at $690 and were made available by two Texas A&M graduates with the firm, announced Dr. W. A. Wortham, department head.

Presentation of the apparatus was suggested by Houston district office manager Huland F. Smith, a 1941 graduate in mechanical engineering, and senior applications engineer James R. Thompson, 1957 graduate in industrial engineering.

Prof. J. P. CoVan of the department said two pumps with three-quarter horsepower motors, a two-HP and one externally driven pump were donated by Ingersoll-Rand.

"These are husky pumps that will move liquid except a very heavy, viscous fluid," he added.
