

Lake Somerville Project Subject Of Grad Students

A group of Texas A&M graduate students has just completed a semester-long class project which provides a master proposal for development of the Lake Somerville area.

The group, made up of architecture and landscape architecture and recreation and parks students, concentrated on principles of design, travel, tourism and recreation for the lake. They were taught by Dr. Clare A. Gunn of the Recreation and Parks Department.

The final project plan covers an overall combination of separate developments needed for an estimated total of 2,000 persons on any one day, 20,000 persons for peak days, and 40,000 for special events.

INCLUDED ARE special activity areas, such as a primary tourist service center, a second home subdivision, a resort-convention center, a boating-picnicking complex, sightseeing tours and a fishing complex.

The project's approach is based upon tourism-recreation research which Gunn conducted in Michigan and Hawaii before he came to Texas A&M.

"Most training in the past," Gunn said, "approaches development from strictly a park, recreation area, or a hotel, motel and restaurant business point of view. What is needed is an approach that combines the many parts of development because this is the real life happening today."

To add to the challenge of total land design, the students included the town of Somerville in the overall proposal. Information, interviews and several guided tours were provided by the Corps of Engineers, developers of the reservoir.

Gunn divided the semester's work into four phases. Students studied in teams and as individuals. As more emphasis was placed on aesthetics and artistic design as on physical functional aspects.

IN THE FIRST phase, the students researched the area, the visitor characteristics and the land ownership patterns. "The greatest needs today are creativity and innovation. These are the unique contributions of designers. However, their efforts can be more appealing and more useful if based upon sound study of facts," Gunn pointed out.

Climate, topography, soils, water resources, wildlife and vegetation were among the natural resources studied. Also investigated were characteristics of users of Lake Somerville and other Texas reservoirs, economic development, history and legends, aesthetic properties and geographic position.

The second phase was the synthesis of the research to determine its meaning in terms of travel, tourism and recreation expansion. Individual student conclusions were drawn here.

PREPARATION of a preliminary program for development was the third phase. The value of idea interchange between the two types of students was evident at this stage.

"The recreation and parks students utilized their backgrounds to plan for what they felt should and could be done," Gunn explained. "The design students conceived ideas on how and where these things could be accomplished for best land use and enjoyment for future visitors."

Narrowing and refining solutions into one overall project plan was the final step.

"This has been the most exciting part of the project because it meant considerable give and take among the highly specialized students, as well as making use of the research data."

Draft Call Down, 15,000 In July

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon's draft calls, which began shooting up in January and peaked at 48,000 in April, continued to slide down Wednesday with a request for 15,000 Army recruits in July.

At the same time, the Defense Department said the Army finds it needs 9,500 fewer men in June than expected, so the draft call for that month is being reduced from 29,500 to 20,000. It was explained that the Army overestimated the number of men who will be discharged during the month.

The 15,000 July request is the lowest since the 11,400 of April last year. Draft calls rose sharply at the start of this year because so many called in the Vietnam buildup two years ago were completing their compulsory service.

But now that that cycle is complete, the Pentagon said lower draft calls can be expected during the second half of 1968.

The changing draft picture comes at a time when 39,000 Reservists and National Guardsmen are being called up.

Air Reservists, air Guardsmen and naval air Reservists totaling 14,787 were mobilized Jan. 26 shortly after the North Koreans seized the U. S. intelligence ship Pueblo and its crew.

Then a month ago about 24,500 Reservists and National Guardsmen were ordered to report in 30 days. About 20,000 of those joined the active force this week, forming some 87 units from 34 states. Another 3,600 individuals needed to fill out units are to show up June 15.

The callups this year have run this way: January, 34,000; February, 23,300; March, 41,000; April, 48,000; May, 45,900; June 20,000; July, 15,000. The 48,000 April total was near the highest Vietnam callup of 49,200 in October 1966.

YMCA Selects 120 Counselors For Fish Camp

Sophomores, juniors and seniors — 120 of them — have been selected as Texas A&M counselors for the YMCA's "Fish" camp this fall.

Selection Chairman David Howard of Houston said the camp will be conducted Sept. 7-10 at Lakeview Methodist Assembly grounds near Palestine.

Howard predicted more than 400 entering freshmen chosen from top levels of high school graduating classes throughout the state will participate.

Speakers include A&M professors, student leaders and ministers from Bryan and College Station, he said.

Howard said freshmen attending the camp often become student leaders at A&M. And counselors, he observed, are challenged to become better students and more effective leaders.

Engineers Begin Auto Tire Tests

Engineers at Texas A&M's Texas Transportation Institute begin tests this week for the National Bureau of Standard's program establishing safety and performance ratings for automobile tires.

Dr. C. V. Wootan, associate TTI director, said the traction characteristic studies will be conducted under a $70,000 contract awarded last month.

He noted TTI just completed preliminary evaluations of the cars and types of pavements to be used in the tests.

Wootan said the initial tests will be witnessed by representatives of the NBS headquarters in Washington, D. C., and Davidson Laboratories of Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N.J.

The TTI official emphasized NBS personnel will conduct the actual tire ratings. "Our role will be to develop criteria for establishing test to measure traction characteristics," Wootan explained.

Tire traction is one of five general areas being explored in the tire evaluation project ordered by the Department of Transportation's National Highway Safety Bureau.
