Traditions Vital Part Of A&M Life

Fish Find Spirit Molds Character

A&M's long, colorful past has seen traditions come and go-some lasting only a few weeks and others remaining throughout the school's history.

Probably the first tradition, and one of the more important ones, is "Once an Aggie always an Aggie." The Class of 1880, first to graduate, is said to have inauguarated it to promote school spirit.

As Aggies of today travel around the country they often meet one of the A&M men from older classes who inevitably greets them as long-lost brothers and goes all out to make them feel at home.

This custom of sticking together is now world known, and wherever two Aggies meet, no matter what their ages, there is sure to be much handshaking and backslapping.

Texas A&M, of which you, a freshman, will soon be a part, has long been known for the gallant fighting spirit, which Aggies always display.

You too will soon feel this spirit, and will make it a part of your daily life. It is this spirit that inspires all A&M men with the feeling of unity and devotion to their

It is the spirit gained through hard work and loyalty to the school, and it attaches itself so firmly to men of A&M that they carry it with them the rest of their lives.

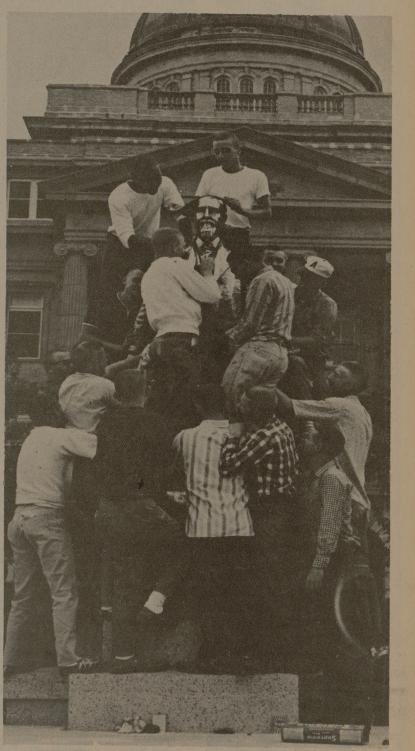

The Aggie Spirit helps to mold a man's character. The things he does and the manner in which he lives with his fellow students make a permanent impression on him. As an individual, he works for the good of A&M, and by his actions and influence, he aids others to do the same.

The Aggies who have been here before you have been responsible for preserving the best in our Aggie traditions and you too will be responsible to pass them on, untarnished.

The respect that you hold for being an Aggie and the way you treat your fellow Aggies will be a reflection of your Aggie Spirit.

As you gain a knowledge of the traditions of A&M, you will become a part of it and learn its greater meaning. You will feel that you are a part of something greater and larger than yourself, something noble and moving.

At the end of your college life, if you have followed through well, you will be happy for two reasons—for the part you played in making A&M better and for the enrichment that the fine campus has given your life.

Statement of Purpose for the Campus Ministry at Texas A&M University

Texas A&M University is concerned with the total development of its students. The encouragement of spiritual growth is highly important in this program of total development for those who come here seeking an education.

There are many faiths represented among the students, faculty and staff member who comprise the University community. Our campus ministry is called upon to stimulate spiritual growth among the members of the University community as they search for more meaningful direction in their lives, according to their particular faiths. This task is accomplished through various types of worship, programming, and personal counseling, which we know as the campus ministry.

In a spirit of close harmony, the campus ministry assists the University in its educational program by helping members of the various faiths represented to become more sensitive to their responsibilities in the economic, political and social world. In so doing, the campus ministry performs the vital duty of demonstrating the close relationship between religious faith and worthy citizenship.

A program such as this requires continuous communication between the various faiths represented and the University. Effective communication assures each student the opportunity to hold fast to his faith while studying here, thus laying groundwork for continued spiritual growth in the years to
