

Reserves To Train At Brayton Field Fire School

Texas A&M will add a new dimension to its military instructional status this month.

Soldiers of the 420th Engineer Brigade will train at the university's Brayton Field Aug. 10-24. Personnel of the Texas Engineering Extension Service will instruct the 463rd Engineer Platoon of Huntsville in firefighting, rescue and emergency operations.

The newly-organized platoon of one officer and 23 enlisted men will be trained by members of the Firemen's Training School headed by Chief Henry D. Smith. Training was contracted to A&M by the U. S. Army in cooperation with the Fourth Army.

First Lt. William V. Wagner's platoon is one of the cellular units of the 420th, commanded by Brig. Gen. Joe G. Hanover of Bryan. General Hanover and President Earl Rudder are expected to observe the platoon during its two-week summer training, according to Maj. William Ross, brigade operations officer. Fourth Army officials may also visit.

"We feel that by the end of the two weeks, if the men master the training, they should be MOS (military occupational specialty) qualified," Major Ross said.

He indicated 102 hours of training scheduled by Johnny Rauch and school instructors surpasses the amount soldiers receive through normal Army training programs.

"There's only one volunteer fireman with any sort of training in the group," the major added.

"The nature of training Chief Smith has arranged should make the platoon capable of going on active duty and fulfilling its mission: providing the equivalent of a fire station for a division-size camp," Major Ross went on.

Rauch said training will stress "getting their hands dirty. Learning is best accomplished by doing and we're going to have them doing."

He said the GIs will study fire chemistry, tactics and prevention, fire-fighting during civil disturbances, use and maintenance of equipment, including rope, hitches, nozzles and appliances, extinguishers, ladder, hose, protective breathing apparatus and pumpers.

The soldiers will learn rescue carries and drags, fight petroleum, structural and LPG fires and receive instruction in brush and range firefighting. Kenneth Burton of the fire control department, Texas Forest Service, will assist in the latter.

Chief Smith has assigned Rauch, James R. Dobson, Tom Robinson and W. B. Dorman to the two-week training program.

"Others will probably assist from time to time as needed," Rauch added.

TEES' school personnel are in prime instructional trim for the platoon's summer training. The regular A&M firemen's training school, industrial and Spanish firemen's training schools immediately precede the Army program.
