Air Force Draws Government Fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government investigators have reported that during one six-month period, the Air Force junked about $6.7 million worth of damaged equipment, most of which could have been economically repaired and used again.

$6.7 million in equipment had been scrapped during six months in 1967 because base personnel believed that the repair costs would be excessive. However, GAO had technicians at three repair depots check 78 condemned items and found that 51 of them could have been repaired for substantially less than replacements would cost.

New TV Service Talked By Council

The College Station City Council Monday tabled a measure which would have provided the area with two television cable services. The Community Cable Corporation had petitioned the City of College Station for a franchise.

Graduate Students, Instructor Given Air Force Awards

Eight Air Force decorations were awarded Friday to graduate students and an instructor of the Aerospace Studies Department, Capt. Louis D. Sassman Jr. Medals were presented in AFOTC classes by Col. Vernon L. Head, professor of aerospace studies.

Captain Sassman received the Bronze Star Medal for 1967-68 service as material control section chief at U-Tapao Airfield, Thailand. The assistant professor who came here last June was with the 4258th Strategic Wing. Decorated graduate students are officers studying at A&M through the Air Force Institute of Technology program.

100 - Milers 'Running Wild'

Things have "just gone wild" in A&M's 100 Mile Club, with people running all over the place, says John M. Chevette, smiling.

Chevette, an assistant professor in the Health and Physical Education Department, is happy over what has happened since club members started running a year ago.

With several members past the 100 mile mark, they were awarded certificates, Chevette pointed out. "But they needed an incentive after the first 100 miles to keep them going," he added.

Chevette explained that the 'chevron' award to the original certificate will be given for every additional 100 miles. He feels it has helped. "We badly need to run," Chevette said. "We are a nation of sitters, getting everything done for us!"

week, averaging 10 miles weekly this includes a 30-minute exercise period. If he does not exercise, then he doubles his mileage. He averages three or four miles an hour. He is a 'running public relations firm for us' Chevette said.

hour, Liccioni declares it "is like starting the day all over again" he has lost "quite a few pounds" since starting.

Keeping close pace on Liccioni is Ed Kozloff of the Health and Physical Education Department and freshman student Edward Hirsch, both of whom have exceeded 300 miles.

And, past the 200 mile mark are students Sally Smith and William Johnson, and Chevette.
