A dream proposed may easily become a dream realized if Dr. W. B. Jones Jr. has his way. The dream is the development of a semiconductor and integrated circuits laboratory which could have a major effect on the electronics industry, Jones admits. Jones is head of the electrical engineering department which started program development two years ago. Faculty members agree a new revolution is quietly spreading across the nation with a "dramatic impact" on the electronics industry.

"The impact of semiconductor devices on the electronics industry has been dynamic," Jones declared. "Now integrated circuits are bringing about another revolution in electronic circuits and systems." He attributes the popularity of semiconductor devices to better performance, greater reliability, smaller size and weight, and lower cost.

Many of today's complex electronic systems would not "be feasible, either technically or economically, without semiconductor devices," Jones added. Keeping in step with the industrial revolution, Jones' staff has increased instruction and research, and a faculty member was added this year.

"A substantial start" has been made toward providing laboratory facilities for the fabrication and testing of semiconductor devices, Jones reported. Two rooms are being modified in the Electrical Engineering building to house the laboratory. Approximately 1000 square feet of floor space will be used exclusively for the laboratory.

Facilities for electric power, deionized water, chemical sinks, cooling and ventilation are being installed. "Long range laboratory objectives are to develop excellent programs in the characterization and design of semiconductor materials, devices and integrated circuits," Jones disclosed. "The research program now being established will emphasize fundamental problems in the manufacture and application of semiconductor devices."

The research program has "been oriented toward the long range needs of both manufacturers and users," he said. Immediate research projects include dislocations in semiconductor materials, nuclear radiation detectors, semiconductor device characterization and microwave integrated circuits.

In addition to Dr. Jones, Prof. A. J. Druce has been a leader in developing the entire concept of the laboratory and has the principal responsibility for the physical facilities. Research participants include faculty members Dr. J. S. Linder, Dr. C. R. Haden, Dr. A. J. Girola, Dr. C. W. Alworth and W. A. Porter.

Commission Plans Education Change

The Texas higher education commissioner charged here Tuesday that Texas education is "a victim of urbanization" and an academic growth plan is "no easy task."

Dr. Bevington A. Reed was keynote at the 25th Junior College Conference meeting here. "The coordinating board is charged with developing a statewide plan for coordinating growth," he declared. "It is not drawing up a master plan, but developing a plan for orderly growth of education in Texas," Reed added. He noted there is a vast difference between the two programs.

He pointed out the board is not developing a "straight jacket that will prevent growth." Reed noted the board is attempting to design a plan "so the state can achieve a standard of excellence for all of its youth."

He said this idea carries the connotation "that everyone should have a degree." Reed added it was his understanding that it meant "we cannot afford to have anything but excellent programs."

He recalled the board was established to "help achieve excellence in teaching of students. This is our purpose." The educator pointed out that "not all teaching needs to be the same way, but it should be excellent, and related to a statewide program."

He discussed problems of an educational growth program, showing Texas has followed the national trend of a rural population becoming urbanized. As a result, he said, "universities are sometimes removed from population centers."

Another problem, he continued, was one of numbers. "If enrollment has doubled in the last few years," Reed predicted, it will double again by 1980." He stressed his prediction was a "very conservative" effort.

He admitted "increased numbers" mean more problems, demanding "new and different programs to meet the needs of people." "We're trying to provide spaces where young people can find quality education," he said.

Monday conferees heard J. W. Haynie, assistant director of vocational programs development for the Texas Education Agency, and Dr. John Dunn, chancellor of Peralta Junior College District, Oakland, Calif.

The conference ended Tuesday.
