

Ex-FBI Agent Seeks To Upgrade 'Police Science'

FRANK M. IVEY

Texas A&M's newest researcher, Frank M. Ivey hopes "law enforcement in general will be able to keep abreast of other aspects of science" and be upgraded as a result.

Ivey, a retired FBI agent, joined A&M as a research associate this week after 21 years with the nation's best known law enforcement agency.

"We're confronted with an explosion in the field of science," he explained, "but not in law enforcement." He pointed out the technological advances have not "materially assisted law enforcement."

He added it may be due to the "shortcomings of law enforcement itself."

THE RETAINING of Ivey is expected to form the nucleus of research for better police practices, A&M Dean of Engineering Fred J. Benson said.

Benson said Ivey's appointment is a part of "our effort to develop competence to deal with all facts of the urban program. His work will be in practical human relations."

Ivey said two apparent needs exist in law enforcement. He identified them as training of personnel and financial remuneration.

"Remuneration is much below what it should be," he said.

"Often, officers are paid less than a janitor, although their responsibility is great," he disclosed.

HE LABELED the "tremendous authority" of an officer as one prerequisite for needing "background training."

"It has been recognized that pinning on a badge and giving a man a gun, then sending him out to do a job needs to be modified," he said.

He added some officers are armed with all sorts of devices, including the law, but do not know how to apply them.

As a curbside opinion, Ivey added that better trained officers will result in a higher detection of crime.

He said many persons operate on the premise that they "will not be detected and bring the focus back upon themselves."

Ivey is presently engaged in an inventory, in cooperation with A&M's Industrial Economics Research Division, of law enforcement in the six counties that comprise the Brazos Valley Economic Development Council. They include Brazos, Burleson, Grimes, Leon, Madison and Robertson counties.
