

"With th' climate as sensitive as it is, it's hard to express our enthusiasm without fear of more criticism!"

Luce Speaks Out For Silent Majority

That vast, silent majority of college students who don't make headlines like those on page 5 may have found an active spokesman for their non-cause.

A recent issue of The Daily Texan carried articles and pictures on the visit of Phillip Abbot Luce, a California official of the Young Americans for Freedom, who debated Assistant Prof. Larry Caroline at the University of Texas at Austin. Luce, who sports a manelike haircut and a mustache, was active in the Progressive Labor Movement until 1965, but left the organization when "it became obvious . . . that no matter how much we called for more freedom in this country, what we were really proposing was totalitarianism." He now appears to be a major critic of the "New Left, with high potential for reaching that silent majority.

(To many of us, YAF might still conjure up visions of Young Republicans for Goldwater, the Junior Minutemen or the Sons-of-Birchers. Luce does not consider YAF to be "an extreme right-wing organization," but sees it as "the only activist group on campuses opposing the New Left," the Texan reported.)

Among Luce's points were the following:

- Many administrators "are fearful of protecting the interests of the majority of students," many of whom "are now willing to oppose groups that try to force their opinions
- If campus leftists were true revolutionaries, "instead of playing revolutionary games," they would go fight
- Students opposed to violent methods of changing the present system should work with local political parties, "who are crying for young people."
- Opponents of New Left activists "are not allowed to speak because these young people feel their position is totally correct," and are "unwilling to allow the opposition to be heard." The New Left is "terrorizing student opinion."

Those of us who haven't yet reconciled ourselves to the New Left's assertion that the System must be destroyed if social ills are to be cured, may see some encouragement in the words of activists like Luce. The system may be riddled with faults, but most of the members of that silent majority don't want to try doing without it; and with more spokesmen like Luce, we may never have to.

"tell you what I'd do"

As just about every employee of the Texas A&M University System knows by now, folding, bending or spindling

The Payroll office has sent out a memorandom asking everyone to be more careful, as it is causing a lot of extra work over there, re-punching the automated cards. What I would like to know is how anyone could hold onto his pay-check long enough to mutilate it, as evidently some people

The whole computer payroll fracas reminds me of a story I heard a few years ago about an elderly man who walked into the local bank to cash an Internal Revenue

He strolled up to the cashier's window and opened his weathered billfold and removed a wad of paper. He began to unfold the computerized card when the teller said:

"You really shouldn't fold those checks like that—Uncle Sam doesn't like it.'

'Ma'am," the man said slowly, "there are a lot of things Uncle Sam does that I don't like." He cashed his check.

A national dog food company has just announced the "1968 Fido Awards" for people who have contributed the most to promoting dog-raising. In addition to the "Dogdom's Woman and Man of the Year" and "Dog Handler of the Year" award, there is the "Dog Writer of the Year"

It really disappoints me to learn that it is a man who has spent most of life writing about—of all things—dogs. I know that I've written some real dogs of stories and there are quite a few television and movie script writers that should have won the same award, except under less honorable circumstances.

What's happened to the world? Everything is sex. everything. You can't even order fried chicken now without Freud entering into it.

Try to order a plate of "second-joints" and see what happens. You are corrected by the waitress:

"I'm sorry, sir, we don't serve second-joints—how about 'thighs' instead?"

The same thing is true of drumsticks. They are now called, of all things, "legs." Not to mention the order of "breasts" that any 12-year-old can request.

What we need is for the Poultry Science Department here to start an all-out campaign to save the young and the weak from such obvious undermindings of morals.

This poem was written by Capt. Joe Bush '66, former head yell leader, who was killed in Vietnam earlier this month:

TO A COMMUNIST American, American I'll always be Through all my life with liberty. I'll fight and I'll die, if there be

For the right to live the American creed.

Anarchist, Communist, come face me!

And one tough American you'll surely see, I'll fight and I'll die, just as I

My small life to my country I'll

America I love, try and take her away, And you'll be sorry that you lived that day. For I'll beat you, and in triumph I'll reign.

And a free American I shall remain.

Free I live, in God I trust. But the arms of the free, they bear no rust.

Come and fight me, and you will Why America today has liberty. We all love our land, we'll fight

Before your flag will be seen in our sky. Yes, I'll fight for my country and

I'll fight well. I'll beat you down, and stomp you to hell. Then I'll return home and and die

American I'll be While I live out my life in liberty. This expresses the creed he lived and died by.
