

Mayor Anderson Receives Unusual Gift From Pakistan

College Station Mayor D. A. (Andy) Anderson received an unusual art object that will serve as a constant reminder of Texas A&M University's friendly relations with East Pakistan.

S. M. Najmul Haque (pronounced huk), East Pakistan Agricultural University dean who will be at A&M for the next three months, presented the mayor a brass artifact.

"It's just a friendly gesture," explained Haque, dean of agricultural engineering in food technology faculty at the Mymensingh university.

The conversation piece acquired in a Dacca antique shop is a brass replica of a classically-posed cobra with an angel mounted on its head. Of unknown origin, the unusual decorative item was probably made by Indian artisans "doing the same style of work today as they did 2,000 years ago," commented Dr. Jack Gray, International Programs director at A&M.

The A&M official, who has traveled extensively in A&M-Agency for International Development contract work, and Haque agreed the artifact could be as little as 200 and perhaps more than 1,000 years old.

Haque will make his office in the Agricultural Engineering Department at A&M and pursue studies in the field and food technology here and at other universities including Cornell, his alma mater.

The East Pakistan educator also will work at the U. S. Department of Agriculture food lab, at various A&M Agricultural Experiment Stations and with Agricultural Extension Service personnel in irrigation programs.

A&M Book-Binders Masters Of Craft

Three Texas A&M University students operate and manage a book bindery that astounds customers with skilled results.

The students make only a brief visit every day from classes to 11 Church Street, home of the Universal Bindery.

The bindery is not owned by the students, but is operated by them, according to Ron Labus, manager.

Labus, a senior industrial technology major from Panhandle, explained that constantly studying from books and working with them, too, isn't as monotonous as might seem.

"It's easy to get into a rut in college and feel your head is glued to a book," Labus said. "Here in the bindery we are kept aware of how important people's books are to them. We make the books last longer and have a pleasing appearance."

John Meier, senior architecture major from Houston, outlined the steps in book binding.

"First we hand-sew the volume. Next comes trimming, sizing and measuring for the cover. Then, in his bindery we are kept aware of how important people's books are to them. We make the books last longer and have a pleasing appearance."

Registrtrion

Transfer students attending Texas A&M the first time this summer may make reservations to pre-register for fall semester classes, announced S. Austin Kerley, associate dean of admissions.

Reservations should be made at the office of Mrs. Caroline Mitchell, assistant director of admissions, in the Coke Building by 5 p.m. Friday, June 27.

Kerley said records will be pulled so transfer students may pre-register during a special summer conference July 2-3.

Fee assessments will be made at the conclusion of pre-registration and bills mailed during the summer.

Students receive class schedules by mail upon payment of fees.

Swimmers Arrive For Meet Friday

Swimmers from throughout Texas who are eight years old and above will invade A&M's Wofford Cain outdoor pool Friday and Saturday for the College Station Age Group Swimming and Diving Meet.

The preliminary events will begin at 8 a.m. both days while the finals will be at 6 p.m. both days. The meet is sponsored by the College Station Recreation Council.

Emil Mamaliga will serve as the meet director. Pat Patterson, coach of the College Station Swim Club, will enter 75 swimmers and divers from his club. Further information can be obtained by calling Mrs. M. L. Greenhut.

Admission is 25 cents per person.

UC's $4,000 Grant Goes To A&M ME's

Union Carbide presented Tuesday a $4,000 unrestricted grant to Texas A&M University's Mechanical Engineering Department.

Ed Burndrett, Texas City plant assistant manager, made the presentation to Dr. Clifford M. Simmang. The mechanical engineering head said the funds will be applied as needed.

Associate dean of engineering Gen. A. R. Luedcke represented the Engineering College at the presentation, also attended by A&M development director Dorsey McCrory and Robert C. Reese, director of placement and corporate support.

Burndrett is a 1942 A&M graduate in mechanical engineering.
