

HELPING FOREIGN STUDENTS

J. P. Bhatt of India helps Ai Lan Doan arrange a mailing list of foreign students for the Texas A&M Baptist Student Center. Bhatt, a horticulture doctoral student, has been at A&M three years. Miss Doan is a summer student coordinator of International Student Affairs at the BSC. She is a senior at Texas Woman's University.

Vietnam Girl Says That 'Americans Are Friendly'

An 18-year-old pre-medical student from South Vietnam contends that if more international people got to know Americans there would not be wars.

"Americans are very friendly," Ai Lan Doan maintains. "Nobody wants to fight a friend."

A senior at Texas Woman's University in Denton, Miss Doan knows a lot about war — she has lived with one most of her life.

Ai Lan is one of two student coordinators of International Student Affairs assigned to the Baptist Student Center this summer.

She says the College Station climate is similar to her native Da Nang, but she still misses her homeland, parents and five brothers and two sisters.

"My family, and all our friends, appreciate the presence of Americans in Vietnam. Our greatest compliment is from the GIs who volunteer for second and third tours" in the war zone, she declares.

If American troops are pulled out of Vietnam she expects the Communists to try to take over her country.

"One thing all Vietnamese people know is to not trust the Communists," Ai Lan declares.

She said the Vietnamese are "weary of war" and it is a result of many years of fighting.

"There was a war when my father was a young man," she states. "My family has never lived without war."

International students who visit the BSC ask Miss Doan about the people and customs of Viet-

A&M Hosts 370 Workshopers

Texas A&M will host 370 high school journalists from 69 schools during the 11th annual High School Publications Workshop July 27-Aug. 1, announced workshop director Mrs. C. J. Leabo.

The annual program is sponsored by A&M's Journalism Department.

"High school juniors and seniors who are editors and staff members of school yearbooks and newspapers will attend the workshop," Mrs. Leabo said.

Also attending will be approximately 12 faculty sponsors and 22 workshop faculty members, including several special instructors.

Beginning and advanced classes in reporting, layout and photography, with both lectures and laboratory instruction, will be held daily during the workshop.

Mrs. Leabo said two publication experts will present lectures. They are Wayne Brasler, publications adviser at University High School, Chicago, whose newspaper staff set a record for awards won in a single year, and Miss Hattie Steinbert, adviser at St. Louis Park High School, Minneapolis, Minn., whose 1966 yearbook was judged one of the 10 best in the nation.

In addition, there will be a "Meet the Professionals" night Monday when journalists from the local and Houston area will be available to meet the students and discuss career opportunities, Mrs. Leabo reported.

She said approximately 270 of the students will be housed in college dormitories with counselors supervising the student's activities.

This year's enrollment is expected to be about 158 more than attended the workshop in 1968, Mrs. Leabo noted.

Returning faculty members include Mrs. Pete Peters of Pasadena High School, Mrs. Peter Dunsavage of A&M Consolidated High School here and George Pearson of St. Cloud, Minn., State College, all newspaper experts, and Mary Frances Freeman of Beaumont South Park High School, Mrs. Leabo, Mrs. Henry Prickett of Houston Memorial High School and Taylor Publishing Co. production advisers, all yearbook experts.

nam. Americans, she says, only ask her about the war.

However, the war has touched her only once. Her father's brother, the oldest son in her father's family, was killed during the Tet offensive in 1967.

Born and reared in Da Nang, population 200,000, Miss Doan is the only member of her native Vietnam family to go overseas. Her father is an X-ray technician in a Da Nang hospital and her mother is a secretary.

She came to the United States through the efforts of a Navy chaplain, Lt. Cecil Threadgill of Pilot Point, Texas, now stationed aboard the U.S.S. New Orleans at San Diego, Calif.

Miss Doan met the lieutenant at a Da Nang church when she was 16. He learned she was interested in becoming a medical doctor and arranged for her to return home with him to live with his family. Lt. Threadgill has two daughters about Miss Doan's age.

"I knew some English and my parents could speak English," she remembers. "When I found out I was coming to America I studied very hard and could read and write English very good when I arrived."

A junior in Da Nang schools, she found she had completed all requirements for a high school diploma when she arrived — except for American history and government.

With the help from Pilot Point teachers, she completed the course and was allowed to graduate one year early.

Five months after arriving in the United States in 1967, she was a freshman enrolled in summer school at TWU.

Miss Doan plans to complete studies this spring, and hopes she will be admitted to Baylor Medical School.

"I want to stay in Texas," she says with a big smile. "I've grown very fond of it."

Money is a major problem, but she had made many friends and they all chip in some funds for her education.

Ai Lan said she hopes to return to South Vietnam next summer and wants to serve Vietnam as a doctor when she completes medical school.

"I owe America two debts. One for making my country free and another for my education," she reminds.

She has one bit of advice for Americans. "Get to know international students. Don't be afraid to ask them anything, or be afraid you will embarrass us. If you get to know us, we get to know you, Ai Lan urges.

"Friends don't fight," she insists.

32 Bankers Go Back To School

Thirty-two Texas bankers went back to school this week as A&M's College of Business hosted a one-week special management seminar for the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Houston.

Thirty-two executives representing the FICB, production credit associations, discounting associations and companies associated with banks started the seminar Monday morning.

J. P. Abbott, distinguished professor of English, explained how to improve performance and productivity through group creative thinking.

Abbott said managers must build a working team.

William Oncken Jr., president of the William Oncken Co. of New York City, told the bankers what a manager must know and what it means to be a manager during the afternoon session. Oncken heads one of the top consulting firms in the nation and has been an A&M seminar speaker for 15 years.
