28-Day S. A. Visit Means Crocodiles

If you haven't been stranded in a boat on a crocodile-infested river, you have never really lived. That's the way seven members of Programa de Educacion Interamericana feel about a 28-day trip to South America.

Four different tour groups are reassembled at Texas A&M University for a two-week assessment and evaluation seminar to culminate the summer study-travel program funded by Department of Health, Education and Welfare Title 3 funds.

Steve Stewart, 23-year-old A&M graduate student, said the experience on the Limon River in Venezuela was just one of many adventures encountered by his group.

"We left Maracaibo to go up river to see the Guajira Indians," Stewart recalled. "The Indians live in houses built over the river and it is a very interesting culture and civilization."

However, the boat broke down and the seven Americans were stranded several hours until another boat was dispatched to pick them up.

"It was something we will never forget," Stewart assured.

Mrs. J. P. White, a French and Spanish teacher at Hardin-Jefferson High School, Sour Lake, was a member of a different group which toured the Caribbean.

Mrs. White said she was amazed by the "taki-taki" language spoken in Surinam and parts of Dutch Guiana.

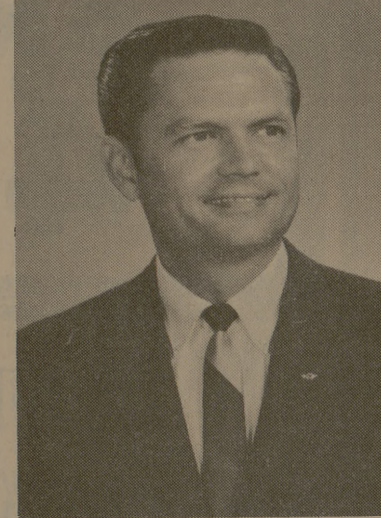

"They do not teach taki-taki in school," she declared, "yet it is the native language."

Mrs. White explained that Negro slaves brought from Africa apparently escaped and because of the many different languages they made up their own. She said taki-taki has a little bit of every language but the structure is English.

"They say a person can learn the language in three weeks, and I believe it," Mrs. White vouched. Voodooism is still a part of every native's way of life in the Caribbean, she pointed out.

There is a beautiful house on Martinique that no one will live in because zombies are believed to inhabit it, Mrs. White added.

Stewart dived in South America for 15 years. His father is employed by the Agency for International Development. Stewart's group toured Bogota, Cali, Medellin, Cartagena and Barranquilla, Columbia, and Caracas and Maracaibo, Venezuela.

POBRE Contract Amends For Project

A Post Office Bureau of Research and Engineering contract with Texas A&M has been amended for a separate developmental project, President Earl Rudder announced.

The $98,863 16-month contract is for Industrial Engineering Department development of a reliability and maintainability analysis program for the Post Office.

Department head Dr. A. W. Wortham said the contract amendment came about as a result of the department's expertise in a maintainability engineering program for the Department of the Army. He indicated it will complement the Army program which has been in operation at A&M and the Red River Army Depot near Texarkana since September, 1966.

Dr. Glen D. Self, associate professor in the department, heads the cost analysis project awarded by the Post Office Bureau last October. He directs the reliability-maintainability analysis program. Work on the first Post Office contract, for $64,782, will be completed later this summer, Self indicated.

Graduate students involved will include Jarrel C. Groat of Liberal, Kan., and William H. Bleuel of Glendale, Calif., among others.
