

Another To Study Law 'Across The River'

7 Exes Enter Harvard 'B' School

Problems of student unrest at Harvard University might have been allayed somewhat this fall, but seven of eight A&M graduates will be at the Harvard Graduate School of Business.

That's across the Charles River from the main Harvard campus, where the nation's oldest university encounters most of its militant students.

Among seven Aggies accepted for enrollment this fall at the Harvard "B" school are three from San Antonio.

An August A&M graduate, Robert J. Burford of Columbus, is the first Negro student from A&M to attend the Cambridge, Mass., institution. Burford, who completed his bachelor degree in history at A&M in three years (including summers), is enrolled in Harvard law school. He had been accepted earlier for law study at Northwestern University.

An A&M official who represents Harvard here said acceptance of seven graduates of any university during one year to the renowned business school is unique. Enrollment is limited to 850 a year and a large percentage come from many foreign countries, he added.

"Harvard believes this cosmopolitan makeup is essential," the official explained.

From San Antonio are Leon E. (Eddie) Travis, 1968 A&M graduate in electrical engineering; Norris Cano, recipient of two degrees at A&M, and Thomas F. Murrah, football letterman and 1966 graduate.

Also accepted in the graduate business school are Donald B. McCrory, 1968 architecture graduate, SCONA XIV chairman and son of A&M development director Dorsey E. McCrory; Jan F. Ahart, 1962 graduate in accounting who resigned a post with Esso in Singapore to enroll; Heriberto (Eddie) Herrera of Edinburg, '67 aero engineering grad with exchange student work experience in a Spanish aircraft factory, and Larry D. Kelley, '67 industrial engineering grad formerly with a Houston firm.

Travis, house chairman of Town Hall his senior year, started masters degree work in electrical engineering at MIT last summer and hopes to complete it while studying for the M.B.A. at Harvard.

Cano resigned a position with the Gray Tool Company of Houston in August to go to Cambridge. He has a $4,500 fellowship at Harvard. President of his junior and senior class at A&M, the aero engineering major is considered by several faculty members to be one of the foremost recent graduates of A&M.

Murrah, son of San Antonio bank president and 1935 A&M graduate Thomas A. Murrah, completed a two-year Army tour in August. He worked for Arthur Andersen and Co., national accounting and management firm of Houston, and was a scholastic All-SWC rider.

'Hot Check' Fines Rise

Persons abusing check-cashing privileges on the Texas A&M campus will pay increased "hot check" handling charges under a new policy of the Fiscal Office.

"We want to maintain check-cashing services and at the same time cut down on abuses of the privilege," noted R. Clark Diebel.

The comptroller of accounts indicated the new policy, which became effective last Monday, is designed to discourage or eliminate habitual hot check passers.

He said the Fiscal Office has $5,000 in uncollected hot checks. During the summer, the office received 742 bad checks.

An increased fee of $3 will be charged persons who pay off bad checks within 10 days, the official announced.

Diebel said offenders will be notified three times by mail of returned checks. The first two mailings will be followed by five-day reply periods each.

The handling charge will increase to $5 upon the third notice, which will be by certified mail. Hot check writers will have 10 days after receipt of the certified letter to make restitution, by cash, cashiers check or money order.

"Law requires only the certified mail. Hot check writers will have 10 days after receipt of the certified letter to make restitution, by cash, cashiers check or money order.

"Law requires only the certified mail notice," Diebel pointed out.

Cases of unanswered third notice will go to authorities for collection.

MEMORIAL ALMOST FINISHED

Workmen from the Grounds Maintenance Department have nearly completed the meditation garden memorial between the east and west wings of Duncan Dining Hall. Former students who died while in military service since World War II will be honored by the memorial, expected to be dedicated in late October.

Construction On Memorial At Duncan Hall Nears End

A memorial to Texas A&M students who died while in military service since World War II is nearing completion at the university.

Located between the east and west wings of Duncan Dining Hall in the Corps of Cadets area, the meditation garden will be the first A&M memorial erected to the war dead in nearly 20 years.

The memorial was designed by Prof. Robert H. Rucker, who serves as landscape architect for the campus.

Rucker expects the memorial, except for the name plaques, to be ready before classes start Sept. 15.

A Corps of Cadets project, it will be financed by the classes of 1969, 1970, 1971 and 1972, Rucker said.

The 10-foot by five-foot memorial stone is centered in a meditation garden surrounded by ligustrums. The bronze memorial plaques are designed and being built by Ben Hardeman of College Station.

Hardeman said the plaques will be in sections with each dead man's rank, name and class included. He projects his work will be completed by Oct. 10.

About 300 names will be included, with space available to add names.

Cadet Col. Matthew R. Carroll,

1969-70 Corps commander, has the responsibility of compiling names to be placed on the memorial plaque.

Carroll's list is to be taken from Association of Former Students records of those men who died in Korea, Vietnam and while serving at any time since World War II.

Corps Adviser Malon J. Southerland said the memorial will probably be dedicated during one of the three home football game weekends this fall.

Landis S. Cervenka of San Antonio, a May graduate, first thought of such a project and coordinated it with university officials during the last school year.

Statement of Purpose for the Campus Ministry at Texas A&M University

Texas A&M University is concerned with the total development of its students. The encouragement of spiritual growth is highly important in this program of total development for those who come here seeking an education.

There are many faiths represented among the students, faculty and staff members who comprise the University community. Our campus ministry is called upon to stimulate spiritual growth among the members of the University community as they search for more meaningful direction in their lives, according to their particular faiths. This task is accomplished through various types of worship, programming, and personal counseling, which we know as the campus ministry.

In a spirit of close harmony, the campus ministry assists the University in its educational program by helping members of the various faiths represented to become more sensitive to their responsibilities in the economic, political and social world. In so doing, the campus ministry performs the vital duty of demonstrating the close relationship between religious faith and worthy citizenship.

A program such as this requires continuous communication between the various faiths represented and the University. Effective communication assures each student the opportunity to hold fast to his faith while studying here, thus laying groundwork for continued spiritual growth in the years to follow.
