

121 Have Army Scholarships

Army ROTC scholarship enrollment here has hit a new peak this fall, announced Col. Jim H. McCoy, commandant.

There are 121 cadets studying under Army scholarships this year, a 34 per cent increase over last fall. McCoy noted the university had a 58 scholarship cadet enrollment in 1967-68.

Texas leads all states in number of high school graduates awarded four-year ROTC grants and of this number, 39—or about two-thirds—are A&M freshmen.

"The Army is awarding more scholarships each year," McCoy said, "and Texas A&M is getting its share."

The 121 Army scholarship cadets include 20 new two-year awards made to upperclassmen this fall. Even in this category, there is an increase over the number of 1968-69 two-year grants awarded.

The Military Science Department screens two-year grant candidates and makes the award, with Department of the Army approval.

Four-year scholarships are awarded on a competitive basis to high school students before they enroll in college. The grant can be used by the student at any of the 270 colleges and universities offering the four-year Army ROTC program.

"It is significant that A&M enrolls these students from all over the country," McCoy said. Each scholarship pays for tuition, textbooks, lab fees and provides a $50 per month subsistence allowance.

Upon graduation and successful completion of the Army ROTC program, scholarship cadets are commissioned second lieutenants in the Regular and U. S. Army Reserve and serve at least four years active duty.

Housing for Marrieds Needed, Report Says

"The rapid increase in the number of spaces being provided for mobile homes in the last two years in this area indicates that an apparent need exists. This is also evident in the number of parks having no vacancy," the report found.

The study further revealed that a lack of listings in the telephone directory and lack of advertisements in news media "indicated they (the mobile home park operators) do not have to seek customers."

The study concluded that further inquiry needed to be made into the possibility of renting mobile homes to students.

"It must be remembered," the report warned, "that the low-priced (apartments) units which are available are certainly not reserved for university students. New families moving into Bryan or College Station are also looking for the same rental housing."

Where does the university stand on this issue?

"It is the official policy of Texas A&M to depend primarily on the private sector of Bryan and College Station to provide the major portion of housing for married students," the report said.

Developers who are reluctant to provide housing might be encouraged to build if there were closer communications between the university and the communities, the study added.

Howard Vestal, director of management services, said today that the university had a "tacit" agreement with private builders that the institution would not build housing units for married students so long as the demand was met by private enterprise.

He added that he personally knew of no one at the university who was dissatisfied with the number of units private builders had constructed.

"And I personally know of no case in which a student could not come to this school because he couldn't find a place to live," Vestal said.

The report suggested that the university's housing policy ought to be "reviewed in depth" and "changed substantially, if not totally."

"It must be remembered that growth in student population at this university is limited to the number which can be adequately housed either by the university or by the community. The current limits of both sources have been reached and there is literally no where else to live," the report said.

The 1970 National Airlines Open golf tournament will be held at the Country Club of Miami next March 26-29.

RESEARCH FIRE PUMPER

The university's Firemen Training School received its experimental fire truck Wednesday from the John Bean Division of FMC Corp. Pictured, left to right, are John R. Rauch, fire school staff instructor; H. D. Bearden, director of the Texas Engineering Extension Service, and Dean Hoover, project engineer for John Bean Division. The truck will be used for research at A&M and it will later be located at various Texas cities for experimental on-the-job testing

Firemen Training School Receives New Fire Truck

An experimental fire truck that pumped an average 2,350 gallons per minute in tests has been received at A&M's Firemen Training School.

The $34,000 unit was delivered Thursday by Dean Hoover, project engineer for the John Bean Division of FMC Corp., Tipton, Ind.

It will be used by the school for research at A&M and on-the-job at various cities throughout Texas.

Chief Instructor Henry D. Smith and his staff wrote the specifications. Funds for the only-one-of-its-kind pumper were appropriated by the Texas Legislature to the fire school, part of the Texas Engineering Extension Service.

Smith's staff worked two years writing the specifications.

They think the pumper will be the answer to the growing problem of getting a lot of water to a fire where there is a minimum of manpower, trucks or water sources. Instructor John R. Rauch explained this is a real factor in big cities where residential and commercial areas are growing faster than the city utility lines.

One man can operate the pumper, which has the capability of producing as many gallons per minute as three average fire trucks, Rauch pointed out.

Instead of the normal 2½-inch intake and outlet, the A&M pumper has a 6-inch intake and 6-inch outlet feeding a 6-inch hose. The hose feeds a manifold that will distribute the water to eight hand lines.

The manifold is currently being designed by the Firemen Training School staff. It will be mounted on a platform at the rear of the truck and can be dropped off at the scene of the fire.

The pumper will then go to the fire hydrant and Rauch estimated it would be effective at least a half-mile from the manifold.

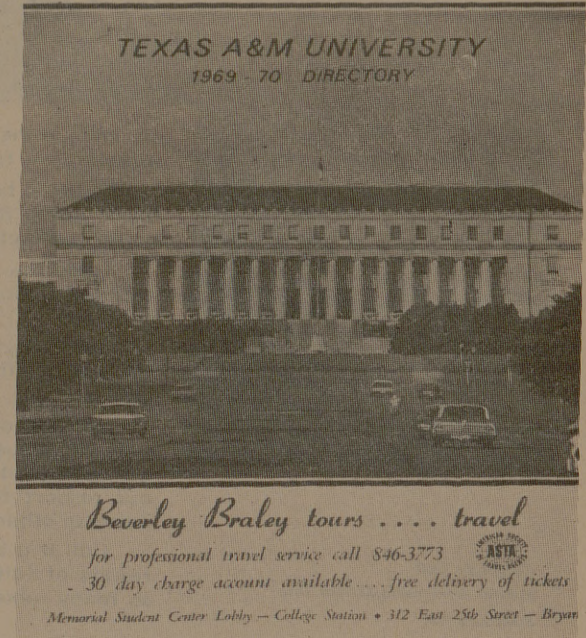

Hoover said the pumper received a 1,750 gallons per minute rating by the Underwriters Laboratory, which tested the truck at Tipton.

Most modern fire trucks pump a maximum of 750 gpm, Rauch noted.

One problem encountered in the design was that no U. S. firms manufactured 6-inch flexible hose. However, it is now available from an East Coast distributor.

The truck is 26 feet long, nine feet high, eight feet wide and weighs 31,250 pounds, less equipment. It is powered by a 350 horsepower V-8 diesel engine manufactured by Detroit Diesel, and it has full power steering.
