

ON OTHER CAMPUSES

By Monty Stanley

The SDS from SMU has disbanded said the SDS co-chairman, in a report in the Daily Campus. "Although we haven't been forced into disbanding, we have been banned in the student's mind because the name 'SDS' has had connotations, especially on an ultra-conservative campus like SMU."

The organization is being immediately replaced by another somewhat similar group, but one which has a different slant in its orientation and a different approach, a much more interesting one, to obtain its goals. The representative from this new organization, the Youth International Peace Party, had this to say about their direction:

"We're going to try to get away from issues such as student power, visitation rights, and liquor which we got involved with last year and turn to more important things such as ROTC, racism, Vietnam, and the black-white problem in Dallas." Another area mentioned was ecology, man's relationship to his planet, in particular the problems presented by water and air pollution, and insecticides.

Completely opposed to "this violent confrontation thing," the group will utilize milder methods. "Guerrilla theatre, a make-up of spontaneous plays that include the audience, would be unannounced and unpredictable," was the remark describing one such tactic. Also proposed was a bureau of speakers to tour the dorms and a draft counseling service.

Good news. Howard Payne College is safe. The president of this small school in Brownwood, in a Founders Day speech, pledged that he under no circumstances would "give the inheritance of this institution to the barbarians."

The KK's at Texas Tech are busy men. Since Sept. 11, they have arrested 22 men on charges of homosexuality. Non-students were officially charged at the Lubbock Police Department, while student suspects were disciplined through Tech's Student Affairs Office. Of approximately eight of the men who were students, all but two were expelled. Obviously, anyone who is a homosexual has no business in the field of higher education, huh? Get rid of them preverts, I always say.

The Afro-Americans for Black Liberation (AABL), so much in the news last spring at the University of Houston, have moved their operations off campus. The reason, stated by chairman Dwight Allen, is that the AABL has evolved from a campus-oriented group to a black community organization. Said Allen, "It is because of this growing concern about our own community that we have decided to base our organization off-campus from now on."

Newest student organization at the University of Southern Louisiana is a thing called the Food and Wines Club. It sounds all right, too, considering that it will be set up primarily to explain the various technical aspects of enology. That's wine-making, for all you non-connoisseurs who probably have thought people serving you wine were just handing you some exceptionally bad, flat Pearl.

At the enormously populated Austin campus of the University of Texas, a new concept has been embodied in the construction of a student complex called Jester Center. The most remarkable aspect of this complex, which includes a 14-level dormitory for women and a 10-level dorm for men is the inclusion of "academic facilities within a dormitory environment." Included in the academic section of the center are "classrooms, seminar areas, language labs, faculty offices, a 400-seat auditorium equipped with modern audio-visual teaching devices, and a library reading room." The idea is to create a small-college type of environment for the residents—mainly freshmen—to minimize for the younger student the problems of size in a large university.

Listen Up

I have only one question. Have College Station and Texas A&M University ever heard of an obscure, obsolete idea called the minimum wage? This is the only place I know of where you can do yard work (with your own tools) for $0.75 per hour, work in a grocery store for $1.25 per hour, or do construction work or similar hard work for $1.50 per hour.

Besides a legal commission, we students need a Better Business Bureau of our own. Many students need to work part-time to help pay their way through college, but should not the time spent working be at least worth the effort?

I know that the university has a graduated system to raise the on-campus wages to $1.40 per hour, but this system has one drawback. By the time the on-campus wage reaches $1.40 per hour, the minimum wage will have been raised to $1.60 per hour. It does not matter though, because the minimum wage off-campus in this area will not be set anywhere near $1.60 per hour. Surely, there must be some way that the students and the university can cooperate to encourage fair wages in this area. Thank you.
