roduced an amendment to Fitzhugh's resolution, calling for the deletion of his statement about the First Amendment and substituting words to the effect that though the senate is not responsible for any opinions advocated by any students, it nevertheless "encourages students of this university to exercise in a constructive manner their rights of freedom of expression according to their convictions."

Fitzhugh opposed the amendment, saying at first that he did not see how Henderson's statement was that much different from his own and that his (Fitzhugh's) was shorter in length.

Then he added that he objected to the amendment because it either implies that the right of dissent has been denied at A&M, which is false, or that it puts the Senate in the position of ratifying the U.S. Constitution, which is ludicrous.

Jim Stephenson (sr-LA) supported Henderson, noting that A&M isn't one of the more progressive schools in the field of student rights and adding that some individuals on campus feel that a student's right to express himself is limited a little more than by those boundaries set by the constitution.

"What individuals," Fitzhugh asked, "and in what cases has freedom of expression been limited?"

"Dress is a form of freedom of expression," Weaver replied.

Before a vote was taken on Henderson's amendment, Weaver was asked what the students planned to do for the Moratorium.

Henderson replied that he had been told that they would sponsor a debate between one who advocated the administration's position on the Vietnam war and one who dissented. They would also wear black armbands in mourning for the war dead and read a list of the names of those who had died in Vietnam.

Fitzhugh maintained that the senate should not involve itself in "political squabbles" of this sort and said that A&M had a number of memorials to the war dead and that another is scheduled to be dedicated soon.

All these, he noted, are "much more fitting than the mere reading off of a bunch of names."

In a roll call vote, Henderson's amendment was defeated, 29-24. The senators went on to approve Fitzhugh's resolution in another roll call, 45-10.

Senator Leon Devlon (grad) then proposed that the senate send the following letter to President Rudder commending him for referring the Moratorium question to the senate:

"The Texas A&M Student Senate would like to extend to President Rudder and the Executive Committee our compliments for their wisdom in permitting issues of this magnitude to be discussed and handled by students. Great issues pertaining to students being handled by students is indeed a fine gesture. We welcome further consideration."

The senate approved the letter unanimously.

Concerning football seating, the senate put together two plans that Collier (Doc) Watson presented in his Student Life committee report and authorized the new system for the Baylor game, Oct. 25.

Briefly, the major points of the plan for ticket distribution (and hence, football seating) are these:

A student may buy tickets according to his academic classification as stated on his activity card, or according to the first digits of his identification card, whichever he prefers. This way a student may obtain tickets either by his academic standing or his tenure at A&M. Thus an academically classified junior may obtain tickets at the same time as seniors if the first two digits of his ID card are "66." If his first two digits are "67," however, and he is still a junior academically, he must get tickets at the same time as juniors.

Both ID cards and activity cards are still required to purchase tickets.

A student having a date with another who attends A&M may purchase tickets on the day for which the oldest ID card is eligible. Thus a sophomore dating a senior coed may use her ID to purchase tickets on the day tickets are available to seniors. He would also be able to sit in her section.

Students may take three ID cards and three activity cards to the ticket window to buy tickets. This allows a maximum of three student tickets and three dates tickets to be purchased.

The consideration section shall be sections 238 and 239. Any overflow shall go into section 237. This "section" is open to anyone who does not wish to stand up during the football game and will be available to all students on the first day of ticket sales, and all days thereafter in which tickets are sold.

Tickets shall be sold on days designated by the Athletic Business Office. Seniors and graduate students will be able to purchase tickets on the first day with juniors, sophomores and freshmen able to purchase tickets, respectively, on the three succeeding days.

The senate defeated a constitutional amendment that would have authorized the newly-formed College of Education to have three representatives in the senate.

Nokomis (Butch) Jackson, chairman of the Election Commission, proposed the amendment "because it's only fair that this group have some form of representation in the senate."

Other senators disagreed, among them Fitzhugh, who said that this would be giving a large number of people formerly in Liberal Arts a chance to vote again.

He said that Liberal Arts representatives could represent the College of Education this year, or at least until figures are available to determine the number of students enrolled in both the College of Education and Liberal Arts. A decision on the number of senate representatives for each college could be determined then, he said.

The amendment failed to get the two thirds margin required for adoption and Jackson, who had allowed students to file for College of Education positions on the advice of the Senate Executive Committee, was instructed to inform those students that the offices were not yet established.

Other reasons presented by one "noted" senator were that there are already too many senators in the senate and that the Election Commission had illegally allowed the filing of students for these positions. I personally feel that in defeating the amendment as presented by Senator Jackson to allow the College of Education representation, that the senate acted in a negative manner. The College of Education, now separate from the College of Liberal Arts, is entitled to representation from members of their own college. The 900 students within the college were definitely denied this right.

As for the other points presented, I can only express that reasoning behind them was neither sound nor substantiated. The Election Commission acted upon the recommendation of the Student Senate Executive Committee and within good faith. As far as the size of the senate—I can only express my disbelief!

I personally regret the action that the senate took regarding the proposed amendment and hope that the situation can soon be rectified.

Residence Hall Roundup

By Raleigh Lane Special to the Battalion All residence halls have completed the elections of hall councils and with the approach of home football games are planning activities for those weekends. Also plans for bonfire participation are being organized in most residence halls.

Last week competition began in Class C intramural sports. More interest has been shown this year with several halls entering more than one team in some events. Several of the fall semester activities are flag football, bowling and handball. A couple of residence halls have sponsored steak fries for the residents of their hall.

On Sept. 26, Davis-Gary Hall co-sponsored a steak fry with Squadron 6 of the Corps of Cadets. Gordon Smyth, President of Davis-Gary, and Bill Hall, commanding officer of Squadron 6, both felt that this event has helped bring unity among Aggies. Each expressed hope that residence halls and Corps outfits can work together in sponsoring events to unite Aggies.

aren't needed. He has had to decide exactly what the author had in mind when he wrote the play, and how he wanted the characters played, and how he wanted the scene. When this was done, he held tryouts for the cast. In choosing this particular play, Wenck had to keep in mind other productions were going to be shown during the year, there would be a good balance of types of plays. He had to read the minds of the people who would be watching the play. What kind of entertainment do they want? Which plays the best chance of attracting a large audience? He also had to keep in mind the problems of putting on a play at a university rather than in a community or on the professional stage. The expense of a university production is little or nothing. In addition, each play has to be a team experience for students of theater.
