MSC COUNCIL

The money was needed, he said, to cover expenses already brought about by speaker commitments. Part of the money, he said, will go to finance a spring seminar on U.S.-Eastern European relations. The council approved the budget with little debate.

In other business, the council: -Accepted gifts totaling $587. -Made provisions for a faculty adviser on the ski trip scheduled for the semester break in January.

Day Student Forms Available Monday

Applications for day student permits will be accepted in the Housing Office from 8 a.m. Monday until noon Dec. 1, according to Don R. Stafford, associate dean of student affairs.

Automatic permission will be given graduates, he said, as well as married students and students living with their immediate family, and exceptions will be made for medical reasons when verified by a university physician.

Stafford added that students who work may be excepted because of hours worked, eating arrangements or living arrange-

Beginning with juniors and seniors, additional considerations will be handled on an individual basis, he said.

"If the room situation is critical," he explained, "people who do not fit these conditions may be granted permission to live off campus for the University's con-

Ben Barnes praised the Aggies saying, "I salute those former Aggies who have died so that we might live free and I salute those current Aggies who have shown that they intend to follow the tradition of honor established by their predecessors.

The memorial and meditation garden was designed by Joe T. Verdoorn, a senior landscape architecture major from Tyler. The idea of the memorial was conceived by Verdoorn and Landis S. Cervenka of San Antonio, a May graduate of A&M.

At the end of Silver Tap the crowd was silent, and only the chirping of birds in the garden trees could be heard. And as the people slowly moved away, the fathers of those named on the plaques marshalled back their tears, the mothers, and the child, continued to cry.

"Several students now living as day students will have their permits revoked at semester's end if a letter from their parents granting permission to live off campus is not filed at the Student Affairs Office," he said, noting that about 75 students will be affected.

* * Student Travel

Meeting Tonight Students interested in participating in the summer student exchange program, International Association for the Exchange of Students for Technical Experience (IAESTE), are urged to attend a Travel Committee meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Room 3B of the Memorial Student Cen-

Committee Chairman Paul Scopel noted that the meeting was part of Travelfest, a week-long series of displays and activities in the MSC which emphasize the advantages of travel abroad.

Scopel said the final meeting of the week will be a slide presentation A&M student participants in IAESTE and other exchange programs at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in Rooms 2C and 2D and the Assembly Room.

* * * Davenport's Talk

Postponed to Sunday A talk on "American Minds" by Dr. Manuel M. Davenport, head of the Department of Philosophy and Humanities, has been postponed due to an illness in the professor's family.

The lecture has been rescheduled to 10:30 a.m. Sunday, in Room 2A of the Memorial Student Center.

The meeting is sponsored by the Society of Iranian Students. * * *

Electron Microscopy Course Offered

An electron microscopy-diffraction course structured for senior and graduate students in engineering, veterinary medicine, agriculture, science and geosciences will be offered at Texas A&M next spring for the 15th consecutive year.

Handled as Biology 430, the course will familiarize students Joseph J. Bush Jr. '66 Lt. of various academic fields with general theoretical aspects and specific applications of electron tion, according to Dr. U. Grant Whitehouse, A&M's Electron Microscopy Center director and course instructor. He noted that the spring semester course will take advantage of new facilities of the center, located in the biological sciences building addition.

He said senior or graduate standing is suggested although junior and sophomore level students with outstanding scholastic records are accepted upon recommendation of the student's departmental adviser.

There are no course prerequisites for Biology 430. Elementary college physics is suggested but not required.

Pre-registration will be through the Biology Department. Additional information is available through Whitehouse, 131 Biological Sciences addition.
