

How It Happened at TIS

 looking good after 38 laps, we must set up just about right.
 One hundred mile mark and really looking good. Got a 15-second lead and the car is working fine, we can pass anybody anyplace. Buddy is drafting again, looks like we are the only ones able to draft today. . . .
 Get ready, here he comes in again. All four tires, gas and a clean windshield and out. This one took a while because of changing the extra two tires. First you change the right side then let the car down, jack up the left side and change those tires. All that time only five people can be across that pit wall because of NASCAR rules. David Pearson took the lead from us that time, but no sweat. . . .

running fine and our tires seem to be holding up better than some other cars. . . .
 Now things are beginning to tighten up in the pits. We can smell victory, and what a sweet one this is going to be. Cotton just told Buddy to slow down again, he doesn't want anything to happen to the car at this stage of the race.
 LeeRoy Yarbrough just lost an engine, while running in second place, and it's really looking like our day. Almost a lap lead and only 26 laps to go. Caution is up because LeeRoy spilled some oil on the track. Cotton just called Buddy in for an insurance pit stop during the caution. A little gas and he's on his way.

One more lap under the caution and they'll be running again. Cotton is telling him to take it easy. Wonder why James Hylton is moving over in front of Buddy?
 Look out!
 Buddy couldn't hear me. He's smoking. How bad is it? He'll have to come around before we can tell.

Here he comes. Get the sledge hammer see if we can beat that sheetmetal back in place. It's no use. The front end is gone. The radiator and water pump and fan look like they may be gone too. . . .
 "Forget it," was all Cotton said after seeing the extent of the damage.
 Buddy looked like he'd been shot when Cotton said that. He sat there momentarily in stunned silence as the realization of what he had just been told dawned on him. Finally he put the car into gear and drove to the garage area.

He stopped the car and just sat there for a while as if not wanting to part with it. Finally, after some minutes, he began unbuckling his shoulder harness and lap belt and slowly unwound his 6'5" frame through the door glass of the now crumpled race car. His dirt streaked face was drawn as reporters started gathering around him and his wounded Charger.
 But it was obvious from the expression on his face that no one was going to question Buddy Baker for some time.
 He was crying.

SCONA Opens Tomorrow

 Singing Cadets perform at 7:30 p.m.

Following Wednesday's activities, there will be a social gathering of SCONA's participants in the MSC ballroom.
 Two panel discussions are scheduled for Thursday with a smorgasbord planned for later that night.

The discussions will be "Building of African Nations" and "African Society and Social Changes."

There will also be a review of the Corps of Cadets honoring all of the participants in the four-day conference. The review will be held at 5:00 p.m. Thursday.

Thursday night, Wallerstein will deliver his speech on "African Society and Social Change."

Friday's round table discussion will include "Economics of African Development" and "Africa and World Affairs."

An open forum featuring Arthur Wina and Paul S. Slawson will be held Friday night. All of the round table chairmen will participate in the panel discussion. No major addresses are scheduled for Friday.
 SCONA's final panel discussion will be "African-American Relations."

Debrah will deliver the final speech immediately following the last round table meeting.

A Nigerian Embassy official in Washington, D. C., and a Kenya education representative are among 20 international leaders who will participate in the panel discussions.

Michael O. Ononaiye, from Nigeria, received his B.S. in economics with specialization in political science at the University of Ibadan in Nigeria.

Melvin A. McCaw served as the Kenya representative for the African-American Institute. He received a bachelor degree in sociology at Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga.

Mosudi K. O. Abiola, comptroller for In ITT Nigeria, who has had experience in banking, governmental finance, college accounting, and agricultural products financing, will lead a panel discussion on capital investments in Black Africa.

The three African students attending SCONA are Richard A. Jolowo, honor student at Lago University in Negeria; Awori Kataka, English student at University College in Kenya; and O. R. Haanbote, student at Rogers University of Zambia.

Any student desiring any information about the SCONA conference may go to the Serpentine Lounge on the second floor of the MSC. That is the official headquarters and SCONA officials will be there to answer inquiries from 7:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. daily.

Council Plans Food Drive

The A&M Apartment Council will visit the Southside, College View, and Hensel Terrace Apartments Wednesday for its Christmas Give-A-Can drive.

Jake Dameron, council vice president, said the members will be in these areas from 5 to 8 p.m.

Apartment dwellers will be asked to donate a can of food to be given to the A&M YMCA for distribution to needy families in the Bryan-College Station area.

The council is expecting good cooperation in trying to make this Christmas a merrier one for many families, the vice president said.
