lowing day to the Richard Coke Building to pay fees and receive his class schedule.

Students who pre-registered and paid fees for the spring term but are not coming back must start cancellation in the housing office, Lacey noted.

Drop-add headquarters is located in the basement of the Memorial Student Center, next to the MSC Barber Shop.

It is open the same hours as the registration headquarters.

Students who wish to change their schedule must first visit with their departmental registration advisors to complete a schedule revision request. The student will be required to present his computer schedule when he turns in his schedule revision request at the drop-add headquarters.

He will then report back to the drop-add headquarters the next day to pick up the revised computer schedule.

To Be Distributed Feb. 1 Grads Get 15 Study Rooms in Library

Fifteen closed studies in the library are available on a monthly basis for graduate students taking preliminaries or writing dissertations next semester, according to Jay Hubert of the Graduate Student Council.

The GSC is accepting applications now, Hubert said. Keys to the studies for the first month will be issued around Feb. 1. He said the council, or its committee, will decide who may use the rooms and has worked out the following procedure for graduates applying for them:

The student to be eligible must be taking prelims or writing a dissertation.

He first must submit to the library administrative offices a letter from his committee chairman or department head which states the reason for the closed study and the date the prelims or dissertation will be completed.

The council will compile two waiting lists, one for students taking prelims, the other for students writing dissertations. Vacancies will be filled from the prelims list first.

The council will notify each student a week before his study becomes available. A student may be dropped from either list at his own request or if the date specified in his letter has passed.

When the student receives a key to a study room, he must sign a statement accepting responsibility for the key and the need for changing the lock if the key is lost. He also must agree to pay $1 per day for late return of the key.

Each student will be issued a key for one month. After that, he may again be placed on the waiting list if he chooses.

The library will keep a copy of the waiting lists for student inspection. The GSC will send notices to students, issue and collect keys, assess fines and handle appeals and complaints.

Hubert added that copies of the complete procedure for applying for study rooms are available from GSC members.

trays off the dining hall tables would be an extra $11,000 a year has been printed at least twice," the dorm president said.

"Most guys don't come to us," Wertheim said, "because they just want something to gripe about — they don't want answers."

Tommy Henderson, CSC second vice president, noted that Fred Dollar, Food Services director, regularly conducts polls in Sbsisa to find out what students want. He charged that many students either leave the questionnaires on the tables or throw them away.

Dollar acknowledged that about 15 or 20 percent of the questionnaires are usually turned in.

As a result of the discussion, Hill agreed to let the board go over the questionnaires received from students as a result of Operation Feedback. The board can then, Hill said, go through the forms and pick out the comments and complaints related to the mess halls. These number, he added, about 25 or 30 percent of the total feedback response.

Dollar also agreed to conduct a poll to see whether students prefer to bus their own trays or have the $11,000 taken out of their pockets to hire the extra help.

Under new business, the board: —Arranged to have crackers available whenever chili is served.

—Approved the serving of TV dinners in Sbsisa again on a trial basis.

—Arranged to have the rest room in the main area of Sbsisa reopened on a trial basis to give students a place to wash up when coming to eat directly from class.

issues of the day," Mullins remarked. "They are not sure that our priorities are what they should be."

He said, however, that only a small minority of the nation's college students condone violence. Most, he added, are willing to seek changes through conventional methods.

Dr. Mullins urged the A&M graduates to "have the courage to speak out for change in the years ahead," reminding them "that knowledge and ideas are of little value in the minds of men and women who lack the courage to put them to use."

Gen. Holloway joined Dr. Mullins in suggesting Americans remember their achievements.

"No other people in history have contributed so much of their services, goods and goodwill from public and private sectors as have those of the United States," he remarked. "In many cases these were given to aid the plight of people we could never know. It would seem that this permeation has caused us to create in this nation a society which cares beyond itself and it bears distinctly on how we use our national power."

The general said the United States' "compassionate use of great power" is unique in the experience of man.

"Historians will find it to have been a startling departure," he continued, "but I submit to you that it has been predictable because it is in great part a reflection of our belief in the very value we prize so greatly."

"Today, we face a decade which could well be the most crucial in modern history and in which strategic nuclear power, at least for now, is a key element of national security and moral survival," Gen. Holloway emphasized.

Judging Teams Take Firsts In Stock Show

Two A&M judging teams took first place honors in college wool and livestock judging this week at the National Western Livestock Show at Denver, Colo.

The university's Junior Wool Judging Team won the same contest a year ago and retired the highly coveted challenge trophy a feat which required three victories over the years.

A&M team members were Ben Ellebracht of Fredericksburg, Frank Craddock and Preston Faris of Medina, and Larry Kesting of San Angelo.

Team Coach Dr. Jim Bassett of the Animal Science Department said Ellebracht was high point individual in the overall contest, first in fleece placid and third in grading.

The Junior Livestock Judging Team captured first place in the challenge carload contest.

The Aggies also placed fifth in the senior college livestock judging event. About 25 teams from major universities competed in the two contests.

Team members are Frank Craddock of Medina, Larry Beerwilde of Temple, Thomas Eckert of Mason, Melvin Young of Tulsa, Bill Varnadore of San Angelo, Bill Obsta of Victoria and Gayle Patterson of Crockett.

Team Coach Doug Wythe, Jr. of the Animal Science Department said Craddock was high point individual in carload judging.
