In Nixon Vacuum, Eckhardt Says Congress Must Initiate

By Pam Troby
Battalion News Editor

Urgent problems facing the United States today require that Congress initiate as well as legislate, Congressman Bob Eckhardt said Thursday in a Political Forum presentation.

Recognizing the "tremendous challenge" of such problems as war and peace, under-education and training, neglected public service and environment, Congress has moved to fill the vacuum created by President Nixon's lack of action, the Houston representative told a capacity crowd.

The Democrat from the 8th Congressional District was substituting for Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

Thurmond told Political Forum chairman Charles Hoffman Wednesday at 6 p.m. that a critical civil rights bill scheduled for floor debate at noon Thursday would prevent him from appearing at A&M.

Later that night hecklers at the University of New Mexico prevented the senator from making a speech there.

Hoffman said that he intended to reassure the senator that he would not face that problem at A&M if he were able to return at a later date.

Hoffman announced at the presentation that Eckhardt was flying in to speak as a personal favor to Sen. Ralph Yarborough.

Eckhardt said that Congress had been criticized as "do little" and "stick in the mud" and that there was a lot of truth in the criticism.

"The President is a sort of super legislator," he said. "Through his initiative processes, he gives Congress direction."

"But with both houses in the hand of the other party," he said, "it is difficult to initiate a positive program."

Eckhardt claimed that President Nixon has "muted the voice of the presidency," and has given Congress no leadership.

He said that in order to initiate action the democratic party has reverted to the use of the caucus and study group.

He said that caucus machinery provided the impetus for tax reform legislation and that a task force created by a study group initiated legislation on consumer class action.

This bill is needed, he said, so that people who are affected by the problems can initiate action and not wait for governmental agencies to act.

"Merely talking is not enough," he said. "We have to say how we are to improve. Society only progresses by developing the process of progress."

"Great governmental documents such as the Magna Carta pointed not to the objective but to the means, he said. "We need to devise these means in Congress, and we are moving towards them."

Houston Educator to Lecture On Theatrics Here Tuesday

A Houston educator will speak on "Comments on Theater in Education" at 3 p.m. Tuesday in the Architecture Auditorium.

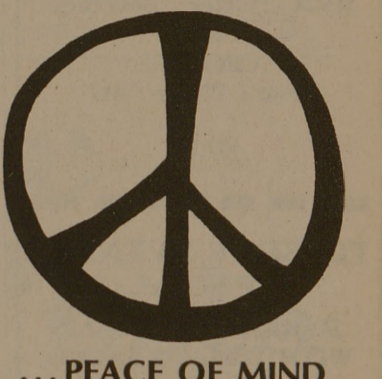

Mrs. Ruth Denny, who currently heads the basic skills section of the Houston Independent School District, is being sponsored here by the Contemporary Arts Committee in conjunction with Festival 70.

Tom Ellis, Festival coordinator, said Mrs. Denny has worked closely with the Lamar High School drama department, the Alley Theater in Houston and with notable persons of the theater such as Paul Baker and J. Wagner, both of whom are with Trinity University.

She has had considerable experience with children in theater and should be able to provide definite insights as to how the theater can influence the educational process, Ellis said.

Following the talk, Mrs. Denny has offered to conduct an improvised session using students and the participating audience.
