estimated $50 million annual livestock industry loss to animal diseases and pests.

"A modest one per cent decrease would be worth a halfmillion dollars per year," he stressed in explaining the importance of the diagnostic aids laboratory.

"Such a team effort can provide greater net returns to the livestock producer and put better animal food products on the table for Texans at less cost."

The dean said livestock disease control programs must include

Dr. Price noted Texas has an three fundamental phases: acsystematic disease reporting service and an effective disease research and control program.

Wednesday, April 29, 1970

Dean Price added "a diagnostic laboratory is able to pick up where the facilities and capabilities of the local resources can go no further."

System Board Chairman Clyde Wells of Granbury presided at the dedication and thanked state elected officials who created the facility during the 60th Legislature.

"Texans can be justly proud of curate and prompt diagnosis, a this facility and the service it will provide," Wells said. "It is dedicated to the welfare of all citizens — rural and urban through service designed to provide an important link in the animal health of this state."

He said McWilliams "understands that one of his first jobs is going to be to go through all of the information that is in the hands of people at the local board ation and is used as a guide for their activity-regulations, memoranda and all kinds of directives.

> "We think we can improve the information in the hands of people at local boards and at state headquarters.

"We think that if we do this, it will lead to more uniform decisions throughout the nation."

At the same time, Tarr said he is trying to improve the local boards themselves. "The President has made it reasonably clear to us that he would like to have the local boards more representative of the population from which young people are drawn and would like to see more youth in the system at all levels," he said.

"I am seeking to do this by visiting state headquarters, trying to impress state directors with the kind of philosophy we hope to have."

Local board members are appointed by the President upon recommendation by state governors, who Tarr said usually rely on recommendation from the state draft directors.

"The thing I was the most pleased about," he said, "was the attitude of the state directors in recognizing this to be a problem."

He said it is not a matter of "rooting out" present board members, but of making appointments to replace the 12 to 15 per cent who leave annually and to fill new seats when boards expand.

Tarr said the General Services Administration-housekeeper for the government-did some sample studies "and concluded that we could get along with fewer boards," Tarr said in answer to a question about reducing and consolidating the large number of draft boards.

Questioned on prospects for achieving an all-volunteer Army through President Nixon's $3.5 billion program of pay and benefits, Tarr said the administration does not really know how well the plan will work. But he said military life "attracts a unique type of personality" who would prefer it over civilian life "given the freedom of choice and reasonably comparable economic opportunities."

The administration does not want an all-career Army, however, he said.

"I think this point needs to be emphasized," he said, "because in the kind of armed forces we want, we need some people for long periods of time but we need other people, and perhaps even more, who are on a rotating basis.

"... The Army would be hurt, would be crippled, if all of their enlistments stayed for 20 years."

achieved quickly and said the draft should be made fairer in the meantime.

> As a start, Nixon barred all future occupational, agricultural and parent deferments, and sought congressional authorization to phase out student exemptions.

This, too, has been a reform frequently proposed-most notably by a commission, which reported to President Johnson in 1967.

"They suggested a more extensive, more definitive study be undertaken and we have authorized them to go ahead in conjunction with the Budget Bureau," Tarr said.
