Dr. Carol R. Anderson of the educational psychology faculty has been appointed director of the Psychological Services Laboratory, announced Dr. Arthur J. Roach.

The lab is administered by the Educational Psychology Department headed by Roach. The department was formed last fall as part of the new College of Education.

Formerly, diagnostic and remedial reading services constituted a large part of the work of the Psychological Services

Laboratory. With the shift reading services to the Curriculum and Instruction Department, the work of the laboratory will be focused on non-reading problems related to human learning and development, Roach said.

Roach noted the lab has a purpose, to assist schools in diagnosis and assessment of learning and development problems and assist in effective methods of intervention with the problems and to provide quality supervision for graduate students in educational psychology.
