Perkins named to faculty post

Appointment of Dr. Raymond P. Perkins to the Industrial Education Department faculty has been announced by Dr. James L. Boone, head.

Dr. Perkins will chair the department's graduate program in vocational industrial education. His appointment is effective next fall.

With the addition of Perkins and William H. Lowry, doctoral candidate in educational administration of Coolidge, the department has six faculty members and a part-time art instructor. Enrollment in the College of Education department is 120, equally divided among graduate and undergraduate students.

Boone and Perkins will be an associate professor and graduate faculty member. He will come from the University of Florida, where he has been a faculty member four years.

The Pampa native studied engineering here in the early 1940s and completed the bachelor and master's degrees at West Texas State after three years service in the Pacific with the Marine Corps.

Perkins, 47, received the vocational teaching certificate here in 1952. He studied automotive mechanics and technical instruction in the Marine Corps and Air Force and was awarded the Ph.D. from the University of Texas in 1966.

His wide experience includes work as a gasoline refinery lab technician, oil field equipment repair, jet aircraft electrical systems instructor and teacher in Gruver and Amarillo schools.

Perkins, who is married and has three daughters, has been a consultant on junior college vocational programs throughout the Southeast U. S. and participated in numerous conferences and institutes and published in various journals.

Rudder Angus sale Monday in San Angelo

A 27-year-old registered Angus cow that produced 23 calves has been given to the university by Mrs. Earl Rudder, widow of the late Texas A&M president.

The cow, whose registered name is Pride EB Girl, will be 28 July 3.

Dr. O. D. Butler, head of the Animal Science Department, said Pride EB Girl is the oldest cow presently on file in the records of the American Angus Association.

He said the animal will be used for research in the Animal Science Department. The longevity and the calving record indicate unusual functional efficiency.

The cow was born on the Ross E. Hanna Ranch at Little York, Ill., and sold to the Essar Ranch near San Antonio in 1959. She went to the Rudder ranch near Brady in 1961 along with 30 performance-tested females.

Butler said the Rudder Angus herd of 433 registered and commercial cattle will be auctioned at a dispersal sale Monday in San Angelo.

Grant to aid assistant prof answer pollution questions

A $40,000 National Science Foundation grant to Dr. Timothy Rose should help answer some of the questions about air pollution and smog.

The assistant professor's two-year grant is entitled "Characterization of Primary Products from Photodissociation of Polyatomic Molecules."

"Photodissociation is the process in which a molecule absorbs light of sufficient energy to break one or more of the bonds holding it together," Dr. Rose explained.

"The breaking of chemical bonds is the initial step in almost all chemical reactions.

Knowledge of the energy necessary to break a bond and the distribution of any excess energy after the bond is broken is essential to a complete understanding of the reactions of the fragments which follow," the chemistry professor said.

Molecules of hydrogen sulfide, nitrogen dioxide and sulfur dioxide—important contributors to pollution of the atmosphere—undergo photodissociation reactions initiated by sunlight.

Dr. Rose pointed out the research should help answer some of the pollution and smog questions.

R. C. Ormerod, chemistry graduate student from White Lake, will assist in the research.

Molecular beam techniques will be used in the study. This relatively new method in chemistry permits observation of interactions with individual molecules rather than the study of the statistical average of many events in a test tube.
