

Council ready for school year

Summer activities of Civilian Student Council members and residence hall presidents are not hindering preparation for the 1970-71 school year.

Howard Perry, civilian student activities director, said considerable correspondence is passing between members and his office in "planning for the onslaught Aug. 31."

Fall semester classes begin on that date and more than half of the male undergraduate enrollment will be civilians housed on campus and participating in civilian programs.

Perry said CSC members headed by Mark Olson, president of Canyon, will attend leadership conferences, the YMCA freshman camp and Midwest Association of College and University Residence Halls convention beginning in mid-August.

All civilian hall presidents and council members will be here by Aug. 26 for orientation and work sessions, leading to orientation sessions for the various halls later during the week before classes start.

A 15-member group composed primarily of hall presidents and accompanied by Eugene C. Oates Jr., residence hall program advisor, will attend the Midwest association convention in Wichita, Kan., Aug. 20.

He said campaign plans are being made to run Bill Scherle of Henderson, Iowa, and Harry Need of Newark, Del., for president and vice president, respectively, of the Midwest region, largest regional group in the National Association of College and University Residence Halls. CSC executive officers also will be at Wichita.

Perry noted that several of the civilian student leaders involved in 1970-71 school year planning are in summer school at A&M. Others are scattered widely, working for a congressman in Washington, D. C.; in the Marine Lab in Galveston and visiting parents in Germany.

Faculty members to attend confab

Four faculty members have been named recipients of expense-paid trips to the Southern Regional Teaching Improvement Work Conference, July 7-9, at the University of Georgia, Dr. R. C. Potts, associate dean of instruction, College of Agriculture, has announced.

Expenses incurred by the four will be covered by the Charles N. Shepardson Fund, a fund established by the former Dean of Agriculture for the advancement of teaching and benefit of education in the College of Agriculture, Dr. Potts said.

Named to represent the University are Dr. J. D. Dodd, Range Science Department; Dr. J. C. Grady, Agricultural Economics Department; Dr. M. H. Milford, Soil and Crop Sciences Department; and Dr. H. W. Van Cleave, Entomology Department.

"These men are among the top teachers in the College of Agriculture," Dr. Potts said. "After participating in the conference, they will bring new ideas and techniques back to A&M and will probably develop a seminar for teachers in the college, so as to improve teaching throughout the College of Agriculture."

The theme of the Georgia conference will be "Innovative Education in Agriculture for the 1970's," Dr. Potts noted.

Turning to the Charles N. Shepardson Fund, Dr. Potts said the former Federal Reserve System Board of Governors member had a keen interest in the teaching program here and had established the fund to assist in improving its quality.

Since its establishment, the fund has helped pay expenses of College of Agriculture staff members attending teaching improvement conferences and has paid expenses of teachers to go to other universities to learn new methods of teaching, Dr. Potts said.

"It has also been used to bring outstanding and recognized teachers and educators to the campus to conduct seminars on improvement of teaching, as well as helping young men pursue advanced degrees," he said.

Graduate courses featured in summer

Three-week graduate credit courses in public school law and school-community relations will be featured offerings of the Educational Administration Department during the second summer session.

The workshop-type courses will have Dr. Bascom B. Hayes of the University of Texas at Austin and Lloyd R. Bell of the Texas State Teachers Association as visiting professors. Both courses coincide with the first three weeks of the second summer session of classes and will run July 13-31, announced Dr. L. S. Richardson, department head.

Bell, president-elect of the National Public Relations Association, will conduct the school-community relations workshop from 8 to 11 a.m. daily. He directs the TSTA public relations division.
