engage in free discussion and exchange of ideas.

A moderator is in charge of the forum, and he will begin the activity at a stated time every other week by placing a soapbox on the ground at the northwest end of the drill field across from the MSC. The moderator, selected by the Senate and Great Issues, selects the speakers and makes sure they do not exceed their 10-minute time limit.

Speakers must present identification proving affiliation with the university, and must not use obscenity. If a speaker ignores a warning on his language, he will be asked to step down. If things get too out of hand, the moderator can simply pick up the box and walk away, ending the forum.

University officials were receptive to the idea when it was proposed last year, but thought the Senate should be responsible for it. Under the adopted plan, the Senate assumes ultimate responsibility, but Great Issues will actually run the program.

CSC meets

activities scheduled by the CSC. Olson said students should be made aware that the purchase of a fall activity card not only includes the holder in dorm functions, but allows him a free dance ticket for civilian weekend.
The spring activity card is good for a free Civilian Weekend barbecue ticket, Olson said. "If residents do not buy the cards, they will have to pay the full price for these activities," Olson said, "but if enough are sold, the sky is the limit on the activities we can have."
Olson claimed the CSC receives only $1,000 from Exchange Store funds for Civilian Weekend, where the Saddle and Siroin Club receives $1,800 for its functions.

bership in the CSC would allow them more freedom in their functions.
"The only way your organization will be recognized by the university is through membership in the CSC," Olson said. "If you decide not to belong, you are renegades."
Olson then ended discussion until Associate Dean of Students Don R. Stafford could be invited to a meeting.
Olson said that while there were only three CSC committees last year, there will be 10 this year, including the Public Relations Committee, Civilian Honor Council, Civilian Dress Committee, Environmental Study Committee, University Laundry Committee, University Menu Committee, Female Recruitment Committee, Civilian Handbook Committee, Freshman Orientation Committee and the Civilian Week-Weekend Committee.

A discussion of the university's position on the serving of alcohol at off-campus dormitory parties was begun by Gore. The university does not recognize nor give authority to dormitories to serve alcoholic beverages at these parties because it would break the law.
"The university cannot be a part of recognizing nor giving authority to break the law, just as it cannot give authority for murder, robbery, rape or what have you," Howard Perry, civilian student activities director, explained.

Olson said a record 80 people will have direct input into the CSC this year, for more student involvement.
"The key to this is involvement," Olson said. "The more we get involved, the more we will get done."
