Baton Rouge...

Mike Lord returns to scene of high school days

It's not easy to get a good Louisiana football player away from LSU, especially one from Baton Rouge, home of the Tigers.

But, Texas A&M did just that, and junior linebacker Mike Lord will be a key performer for the Aggies when they play LSU in Baton Rouge Saturday night.

Lord, who calls defensive signals for the Aggies from his middle linebacker post, was an All-State halfback safety at Broadmoor High in Baton Rouge. Coach Gene Stallings liked the way Lord hit opposing players so he moved him to linebacker. Hampered by an injury early last year, Lord came on fast to win a starting berth for the final three games of his sophomore season.

Last week, in the 41-14 win over Wichita State, Lord was a key figure on defense. Once, Wichita decided to run on a fourth-and-one situation and Lord combined with end James Duback to spill the ball carrier for a one-yard loss.

His first "homecoming" last year was most forgettable. The Aggies lost, 35-6, and Lord was able to play only three series due to a pulled muscle. This year Mike thinks it will be different.

"I think that having already played a game will be a big help, especially for our younger players. It's tough to start a season before that LSU crowd. I don't think it bothered me because I knew what to expect. I knew that tiger cage was going to be there outside our dressing room."

Does this game mean anything extra to Lord? "You bet!", he says. "There is a lot of extra incentive. I know a lot of the LSU players and lot of my high school friends go to school there."

Despite going to high school in Baton Rouge, Lord doesn't really consider himself a Louisianian. He was born in Fort Worth, Tex., and his parents moved back to Fort Worth a year ago.

What Stallings really did when he recruited Lord was bring a native Texan back home.

Lord thinks the Wichita State game was a big help for him in preparing for LSU. "It was my first game calling defensive signals, and I needed that experience."

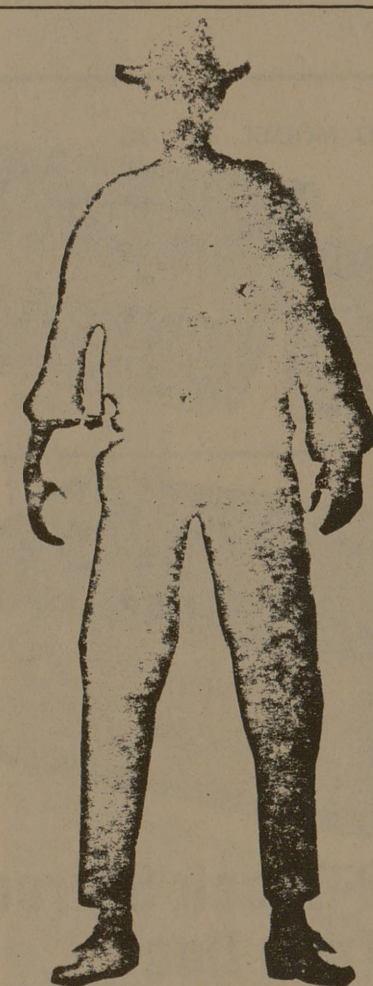

With that extra experience and incentive, Mike Lord is looking forward to a happy "homecoming" this week. And happiness can only come from a win.
