Soviet craft takes samples, heads back toward earth

MOSCOW (AP)—Luna 16, Moscow's versatile moon machine, scooped up samples of the lunar surface, loaded them aboard a rocket and then fired the missile and its precious cargo toward earth Monday.

The rocket capsule is destined to reach the earth Thursday.

The unmanned Luna 16's achievement gave Soviet scientists a morale boost after they lost last year the race to put a man on the moon.

The rocket's capsule presumably will land somewhere in the Soviet Union, but one British scientist said he believed it would splash down in the Indian Ocean with Soviet ships standing by to pick it up.

Tass, official Soviet news agency, predicted a difficult recovery. "As the region of the touchdown territory is rather large, the search for apparatus will represent a complicated task," the agency said.

Sir Bernard Lovell, director of Britain's radio-astronomy observatory at Jodrell Bank said Luna 16 "opens the possibility of automatic recovery of Martian samples during this decade."

Luna 16 was launched Sept. 12, went into moon orbit Thursday — five days later — and landed in the Sea of Fertility on Sunday.

It transmitted pictures to earth while digging up moon rocks "at a depth of up to 350 millimeters" — nearly 14 inches — tass said.

The machine, duplicating much of the work performed by U. S. astronauts, who first landed on the moon July 20, 1969, hermetically sealed the moon samples in a container for the voyage to earth Tass stated.

The rocket blastoff apparently did not damage Luna 16. Tass said the machine would continue to perform temperature and radiation experiments.

It said the electric drill that dug for moon samples and the Air Force cadets score high in summer training

The accomplishments of A&M's Air Force ROTC cadets at summer field training has been commended by Acting President A. R. Luedecke.

"The excellent performance of all the cadets, and their winning 50 per cent of the awards certainly reflects great credit upon the individuals, the Corps of Cadets and the Department of Aerospace Studies," Luedecke said. "At the Eglin AFB, Fla., encampment, a special enriched camp for cadets from the four military schools of Texas A&M, the Citadel, VMI and VPI, Aggies won eight of the 16 major awards available," Col. Keith C. Hanna said.

"About 25 to 30 per cent of the cadet population at Eglin was from A&M," the professor of aerospace studies added. "In this instance, many Aggies were competing against each other for the same award."

Hanna said results from other field training camps are also noteworthy. Sixteen A&M cadets attended camps at other Air Force bases, where the cadet population numbered around 1,000. "These 16 cadets, representing about three per cent of the total cadet population, won five — 16 per cent — of the 40 major awards presented," he said.

The Vice Commandant's Award was made to the top cadet of each 23- or 24-man flight on the basis of leadership capabilities and military proficiency exhibited. Cadets serve in various flight command position during the training.

At Dover AFB, Del., Billy M. Bobbitt of Crockett and Benjamin R. Chappell of Kaufman received the award. Jimmy L. Harris of Waco and Robert S. Rogers of Fort Worth were selected at Tinker AFB, Okla.

Vernon Carr III of Brooksmith was a Vice Commandant's Award recipient at Myrtle Beach AFB, S.C.

Eglin award winners were Kenneth L. Doskocil, Burlington; Ronald E. Hagood, Austin; Kenneth R. Johse, Wharton; Michael J. Shearer, Macoutah, Ill.; Thomas V. Stinson, Jr., San Antonio; Anthony J. Best, Dyess AFB; John J. Quisenberry, San Antonio; and John C. Souders Jr., Dallas.

Editor: Once upon a time there was a top twenty team,

When it came to football they were really mean;

As you walked on their field they'd yell "Tiger Bait,"

But on September 19th they had a pretty rough date.

It seems the "Youth Brigade" from Aggeland

Went to Baton Rouge with their world famous band.

They had what we call "esprit de corps;"

When they left that field they had a lot more.

As the clock ran out the fate was seen;

The score as it stood was 20-18.

Now as this poem draws to a close,

I'll bet you one thing as sure as your nose;

Next week when they pick the top twenty teams,

Those rough, tough Tigers won't be on the scene.

Editor: As Aggie parents (class of '73) we have been very interested in the recent comments on behavior on campus, especially during yell practice and football games. Since we live in enemy territory (Texas Tech) about the only news we get from our local paper is bad stuff.

We have learned over the years to take abuse and criticism from the Red Raiders somewhat gracefully, however, since they will never forget that famous 3-second touchdown not so many years ago. Every time the fightin' Texas Aggies come to Lubbock for any kind of athletic contest, I am embarrassed and ashamed of the treatment they receive from the townspeople and college students here. I sincerely hope that the Aggies do not allow themselves to be placed in this same category.

On our visits to the campus (Mother's Day, Final Review, etc.), we were very impressed by the good manners and friendliness of everyone we met. We are looking forward to the A&M-Tech game Oct. 10, and plan to attend midnight yell practice.

So, please, Aggies, when the Red Raiders come to Texas A&M, show them and the many fans who accompany them, that Aggies are not rude, foul-mouthed drunks (as they like to believe), but clean-cut, decent young men who love their country and their school.

And beat hell out of Texas Tech! #1 Aggie Fans in Lubbock Mr. and Mrs. Bill Dyer

Stage-coach lines had their beginnings in England, prior to 1700. Under the most favorable weather and road conditions, a stage-coach might travel from 60 to 75 miles in a day.
