

From other campuses

Hypnosis is being revived at Tarleton State College under the direction of Dr. Ben Barnes, professor of physical science.

Barnes has announced a special class on self-hypnotic learning which began Tuesday. The class is supposed to aid students with learning difficulties in all fields. Barnes is attempting to help students learn by "using their subconscious mind."

The course "will not work unless the student believes it will work," according to Barnes. Barnes feels that students who do poorly have their mind made up that they are stupid and that they must overcome this fear and defy their subconscious before they can excel.

At TU, the Center for African and Afro-American Studies is growing despite low funds. Under the direction of Dr. Roger Abrahams, the center is beginning its second year. Afro artifacts are scattered around the suite, which is in the Social Work Building, and cool soul pervades the atmosphere.

Abrahams is trying to persuade the university to buy a $10,000 collection of modern African art. In addition, a free handbook for black students will be released at the opening of a Black Studies Lounge.

"It is for people who want to understand the black situation better, not just for blacks," Abrahams said.

At U of H, Dr. Robert Haynes, chairman of the Educational Policy Committee of the Faculty Senate, said his committee will discuss a pass-fail system proposal if interested students find data to support the program and give him as much information as they can.

Dr. Hugh Stephens, chairman of the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee, encouraged students to get their Student Senate representative behind the pass-fail.

A poll conducted at UH indicated the students favor a pass-fail system 10-1. Students were encouraged to write letters and make phone calls to get the proposal through.

Coeds seem to be well accepted by ROTC programs this year. Over 95 colleges and universities are allowing coeds to participate in ROTC. However, only the Air Force extends its full program to women. The Army and Navy are allowing females to enroll only in classes. Women who enroll in the Air Force will be seen in uniform and on the drill field right along with the men.

One coed at Tech serves to illustrate the plight of the university woman. Three males passed her and a friend and proceeded to pinch her posterior. This got her mad as a wet hen and she ran home and told mommy. The mad mother immediately informed the KK's, who were at a loss about what to do about the matter. Perhaps she should have notified Women's Liberation.

At TU Arlington, the flag may soon be torn down and replaced. The flag, however, in this case is the controversial confederate battle flag which may soon be replaced by the Bonnie Blue flag of Texas. The Bonnie Blue is a solid blue flag with a single star in the center.

Courtney Roberts, a former Student Congress member at Arlington, said of the possible new flag, "It originated in Texas. It was well established as a Texas flag long before it went into battle. There is no reason why it should be offensive to anyone." A lot of students just can't seem to get the old study ball rolling this year. You can observe this type in the library dozing, sitting in the MSC hours at a time, tripping around with his head hung down, and practicing other forms of the art of procrastination.

One Tech student has offered some ideas on how to combat this problem. What he recommends is to cultivate your professor. He offers many techniques such as checking out books from the library relevant to your course and scattering them around your desk, practicing the right facial expressions in class, and other variations of brown-nosing and snowing. If these fail and you're too skinny to join the football team, or if a girl, tired of wearing those miniskirts, and the prof still refuses to conform, you can always resort to flagrant "apple polishing."

Bryan Britts store will hold grand opening next month

A grand opening Oct. 8 has been set for Bryan-College Station's Britts Department Store.

The new shopping facility is located in the new Manor East Shopping Center at Villa Maria Road and Texas Avenue.

Britts is the name brand department store division of the J. J. Newberry Co., which has approximately 750 stores in the United States and Canada. The new store will be the second one in Texas, joining the Britts store in Houston's Northline Shopping Center.

The store will offer more than 50 merchandising categories, including family wearing apparel, fashion accessories, shoes, sporting goods, appliances and toys. The store is arranged on a "shop within a shop" concept, designed to save customers time and make shopping easier for them.

Manager of the store will be Robert P. Merrill, who has been in the retail business since 1958. He now works in New York, where he is Britts merchandise coordinator for the eastern United States. He and his family will live in College Station.
