Mars life possible, biologists claim

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two pace-agency biologists have conuded from evidence gathered by Mars spacecraft that, in spite f an apparently harsh environnent, life of some sort may exist

Some earthly organisms can urvive under conditions almost s severe as those on Mars, the cientists say in the current isue of The Quarterly Review of Biology.

Dr. Cyril Ponnamperuma and r. Harold P. Klein, of the Naional Aeronautics and Space Adninistration's Ames Research Laboratory, Moffett Field, Calif., base their report on data from the 20 per cent of the Martian surface that has been photoraphed, and on which temperaure, radiation level, atmospheric ressure and water content have een measured.

Most of the information was btained by three Mariner fly-by missions, forerunners of the Viking 1975-76 unmanned lander which is to search for life on cations of the possibility of life

—The atmosphere of the planet is extremely thin, compared with that of the earth, and the pressure is considerably lower on Mars. But "considerable variation in atmospheric composition and density can be tolerated by terrestrial organisms" and microorganisms can grow or survive at pressures much lower than those on earth.

-Because of the thin atmosphere, ultraviolet radiation, harmful to life, may penetrate to the planet's surface more easily than on earth—but any Martian life may receive some protection in regions that are often covered by a "blue haze which might effectively absorb ultraviolet radiation for varying periods of time." Furthermore, if Mars organisms exist they may have evolved some means of resistance to ultraviolet rays.

-Although the atmosphere of Mars lacks oxygen and nitrogen "Most organisms do not require atmospheric nitrogen and even oxygen is not nuecessary for
