

"Can't you go back to blowing your whistle every morning instead of draggin' a trash can down th' hall?"

By FRANK GRIFFIS

The Student Senate apparently is out to fill the communications gap this semester in the form of subcommittees, whose primary purpose is to improve relations between students and minority groups.

The list of minority groups includes blacks, international students, Young Republicans, Young Democrats, Young Americans for Freedom, members of the Campus Committee of Concern (CCOC) and the University Police.

The University Police subcommittee probably concerns more students than all of the others combined. The subcommittee was formed through a resolution presented by Tommy Henderson, senior Liberal Arts senator, during last Thursday's Senate meeting. Henderson did not mince any words in the resolution. It is strongly worded, which it should be.

The subcommittee was formed out of necessity in an attempt to settle differences between the university police and the student body. I gathered from comments made during a meeting of student leaders and University Police last Friday that the two groups are willing to work together to improve relations, but narrow-mindedness still exists.

For instance, the University Police still haven't figured out the difference between a radical and an activist, and students will probably continue to refer to the police contemptuously as "pigs, heat and fuzz."

Another link in the Senate's communications chain is the soap-box forum, the first of which is set for Tuesday from 11 a.m.

1 p.m. The forum, located at the east end of the drill field across from the Memorial Student Center, is designed to let anyone affiliated with the university give his views in an organized fashion.

Although not directly involved with communications, the pass-fail resolution is worthy of mention. Not only will the resolution set precedent here, it will also probably be given consideration by other colleges and universities. Whether or not it is adopted by the College of Liberal Arts is another question.

The Senate has gotten off on the right foot so far this semester with its new subcommittees, which, if continued in the same spirit as they were formed, could be valuable in patching up the broken links in the communications chain on campus.

In the short time of 33 hours I have heard several tales about the Aggie Sweetheart selection weekend and the new Aggie Sweetheart herself. I was furious to learn how misinformed people are and really can't imagine where they got their information.

Approximately 30 to 35 people were actually involved in the weekend's activities, and only those people know what really went on. All the tales of how rude the Tessies were to the Maggie simply are NOT true! I know—I'm the Maggie! All the Tessies were very nice to me, and we had a grand time together. In one short weekend of sharing the anxieties and fun of being an Aggie Sweetheart finalist, we gained a better understanding of our respective roles and became good friends.

I feel that all the criticism I've heard about Sue Binford is unjustified; she is a cute girl with a great personality and will make a great Aggie Sweetheart. I don't think any of the other finalists felt Sue did not deserve to win. I really think it's a shame not every Aggie can meet Sue and get to know her as well as the selection committee did. I know that they made the right choice for Aggie Sweetheart!

As for myself, this weekend was an unforgettable experience, and I have lost nothing, but gained many new friends.

We agree. We think Sue Binford is a fine choice.—Ed.

We were shocked by reading that Miss Janie Wallace said, "There really shouldn't be censorship anyway. Freedom of the press is a basic American right." We would like to remind Miss Wallace that The Review is not a magazine supported by its own sales and advertising. The students of A&M and the State of Texas largely pay for it.

In other words, we cannot cancel our subscriptions, Miss Wallace. There is the necessity to respond to the needs of those paying for the publication of your article, this being the obligation and means of survival of free press. Also the press has an obligation to present true and factual information. We are unable to find justification for a student who is not holding an elected office to dictate to A&M from Mount Sinai.

Ronald Hambric

No student publication at Texas A&M is supported by tax money. Also, after rereading the story, we fail to see where Miss Wallace is dictating from Mt. Sinai. As near as we can tell, she is advocating freedom from prior censorship, a legal principle in effect in the United States.—Ed.

In last Friday's Battalion you published a letter from three young men who suggested that foreign students object to the term "camel-jock." Since I came to this school, I have learned that everyone here has a nickname—most of them slurs of some kind: non-regs, c.t.'s, jocks, dayducks, B.Q.s and Maggies to mention a few of the printable terms.

I do not approve of all of the nicknames, but I don't think The Battalion should be appointed censor in cases involving these names. I don't mind being called a camel-jock, although I have never even seen a camel. Then again, I might have misunderstood the letter last Friday. Perhaps the three gentlemen were offended themselves by the term "weirdo."

Elias M. Hajj
Some people obviously don't like unnecessary derogatory references. We agree.—Ed.
