The women's liberation organization at TU, otherwise known as the Guerrilla Theatre Troupe, put themselves on trial for allegedly defacing public property. The mock trial resulted mainly from the controversy over a "male chauvinist" spirit sign erected by a local frat organization. The fighting feminists used this opportunity to spotlight what they feel to be "the oppressed state of women today."

What resulted on the West Mall was not exactly a trial, but a crowd of about 400 to 500 debating the legitimacy of the women's guerrilla group.

The women's lib group was accused of inflating the incident of the spirit sign way out of proportion.

Commenting on the attitude of college men, one Liberator said, "They're very uptight about masculinity, and they can't view women as anything other than an object."

Students at the University of Florida marched down University

Avenue to the Alachua County Jail to protest the death of a prisoner, a former student.

The student, William Baugher, was being held on charges of possessing Marijuana. He was found hanged in his cell. Other prisoners in the cell said they were asleep when the hanging took place.

The march was intended to be a protest of William Baugher's death and conditions in the jail.

An enthused female protestor shouted, "We shall overcome," with a clenched fist.

The reply from a prisoner was, "I hope so."

The Cops, clad in T-shirts emblazoned with the word "Pigs" failed against the hitting Hippies.

After the game the fans enjoyed food served by the "Pigs" and soft drinks served by the Hippies.

Journalism will offer course in science, technical writing

By James R. Jackson

The Journalism Department will offer a three-hour interdisciplinary course in science and technical reporting for the spring semester, announced Department Head C. J. Leabo.

Journalism 408 is an undergraduate course aimed at students and staff members who have an interest in science journalism.

Two lecture classes will begin at 5 p.m. and laboratory hours will be arranged for the individual students.

William C. Harrison, assistant professor and former West Coast science writer for the Associated Press, will teach the course. Harrison was a Sloan-Rockefeller Advanced Science Writing Fellow at Columbia University.

Emphasized are the evaluation of science and technology as they involve social processes and the newly emerging surveillance or watchdog role of the science writer.

There are no prerequisites for the course, Leabo added.
