Duryea gains new insight on Yugoslavian journey

A Texas A&M senior from Abilene shed a host of ideas last summer in Putney, Vt., and Novisad, Belgrad, Sarajevo and Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia.

Eddie Duryea, who had lived and traveled most of his 21 years in Texas, participated in the Experiment in International Living.

"One thing I learned," the ROTC unit commander said, "is that people in Yugoslavia are the same as they are here."

"They think the same way, live the same way and have the same interests," the marketing major explained.

Duryea, 21, stayed busy meeting and talking with people during his six weeks overseas as a "junior ambassador" from the United States. He found that he and 10 other members of his EIL group could meet and handle crises, such as the possibility of getting stuck in Yugoslavia after missing a train.

Experiences will assist Duryea in his last year at Texas A&M, during his tour as a commissioned Air Force officer and later life, he believes.

At A&M, he commands the Ross Volunteers, elite honor military unit, and Squadron 2. He is business chairman of Town Hall, Student Senate treasurer, a Cadet Court member and Abilene Hometown Club president.

"I probably learned about as much in Putney as I did overseas," the lanky cadet major commented, referring to the language training and EIL orientation session in Vermont.

There he studied Serbo-Croatian two weeks, with Experimenters from New York, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Georgia, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri and North Carolina.

Duryea stayed four weeks in Novisad, a city of 2,000 about 50 miles north of Belgrad. His "father," a lawyer and member of the province legislature, was a prominent local official. His "mother," professor of art in the University of Novisad, gave Duryea the inside view during visits to art galleries.

He lived with his "family," including 16-year-old Pera, in an apartment house as do virtually all Yugoslavs.

"There were no private homes that I saw," Duryea said. "The apartment was comfortable and my 'family' was very good to me."

Meals, made from daily purchases before breakfast, introduced Eddie to orange juice from Israel, yogurt and milk coffee (milk with coffee grounds mixed in it) for breakfast, the national dish of ground beef in squares ("sort of a hamburger patty with onions"), large amounts of sausage and cheese, and plum brandy, the national drink.

"My 'mother' was surprised that I thought Yugoslavia was behind the Iron Curtain," Duryea commented. "They don't consider themselves an Iron Curtain country, as we do."

After four weeks in Novisad, Duryea and his Experiment group toured the Wyoming-sized country. They went to Sarajevo, where Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife were assassinated in 1914 and World War I started; Dubrovnik on the eastern shore of the Adriatic Sea, Brovnik, Split and Zagreb, second largest city in Yugoslavia.

Duryea and several other students missed their train from Zagreb for Brussels and the charter flight back to the U. S.

"The train station was packed so tight with people we could hardly move. Our second class tickets weren't any good, but we got on a first-class train," Duryea said. "The conductor wouldn't take our travelers checks. Then we found a man who would change them."

"We made it to the plane on time, but I had visions of being left in Europe," he grinned.

Rice yearbook different again

HOUSTON (AP)—The 1969 annual of Rice University made headlines across the country.

That was the one with the nude pictures.

The staff of the '69 Campanile decided to do something different with the usual stiffly-posed pictures of the man and woman voted by fellow students as outstanding.

So they asked them to pose in the nude, and the two did, thus creating a mini-furor which finally died down after the school administration decided that if the student editors wanted nudes, they could have them.

Now the 1970 university yearbook is out, and again with nudes. But the big news revolves around the total book, or books.

There are five of them and they come with miscellaneous posters and a record, all packed neatly in a 10 by 10 inch box marked "Campanile 1970."

Each senior was given a 5 by 7 inch page in one of the books for a farewell message to Rice, and the Hitler picture was Howard Simm's contribution.

In another volume, each senior is shown in a series of pictures taken by one of those photograph-yourself booths found in bus stations and penny arcades. The staff rented the machine for the poses.

One senior, Lloyd Johnson, appeared nude except for a bottle.

Another student has three conventional poses, but with the fourth one a closeup of half of his exposed bottom.

One bespectacled girl senior is pictured kissing the bare navel of an unknown male.

BIOMEDICAL ENGINEERING program was judged best engineering display at the Career Day held here last weekend. Second place in the competition went to Agricultural Engineering, and Chemical Engineering and Nuclear Engineering tied for third.

Special pay bonus to be given recruits

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Pentagon hopes to lure recruits into signing up for the infantry and other combat jobs now given mostly to draftees by offering special bonuses when the military switches to an all-volunteer force.

Under the proposed plan, men who choose the infantry, armor or artillery branches will be paid as much as $150 extra a month. This would virtually double the present pay of many American fighting men, already the highest paid in the world.

"It's a supertop-priority item and it's on the front burner of all the services," Roger T. Kelley, assistant secretary of defense for manpower, told a news conference Wednesday.

The proposal is one of dozens being reviewed within the Pentagon for various ways to make military careers more attractive. Earlier this week, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird ordered the armed services to take immediate steps for ending reliance on the draft by July 1, 1973.

Kelly declared the armed services would go all out to "meet or beat" that deadline. Military officials believe that whatever steps are taken, special incentives will be needed to get men to volunteer for combat assignments.

Pentagon figures show that 80 per cent of the riflemen — the grunts — in Vietnam last year were draftees.
