

CADET SLOUCH by Jim Earle

"See, it's right around the corner! Aren't you glad we didn't take them down?"

LISTEN UP the batt forum

Editor: In reply to the letter of the three gentlemen who accused me of being narrow-minded, how could they be so "narrow-minded" and accuse me of such? Their letter was one of fine points, expressed their opinion of the matter real well, and one that I could appreciate. I do not want to use this Listen-up column as a battleground for student views. But student opinions are like noses, everyone has one.

My opinion, expressed in my letter, was how I felt about this particular matter and the letter of the three gentlemen (Tim Dunn, Tom Hall, and James Parsons) was how they felt. Well and good, more power to them. I felt my way and because I did they falsely accused me of being narrow-minded. It's like I said before, everyone has an opinion and because you may or may not agree with another, it doesn't make the other person or party to be narrow-minded.

I just can't see how anyone can accuse me of being narrow-minded because of one letter. So please brothers, peace!

We're glad you don't want to use Listen Up as a battleground, because neither do we. This, then is notice to all our fans that personal battles are forbidden within our letters columns.—Ed.

Sex is selling for UH psychology professor Dr. James L. McCary. Over 100,000 copies of his book "Human Sexuality" have been sold. McCary teaches a course called Human Sexuality to more than 1,000 students a semester at UH.

Many literary experts acclaim "Human Sexuality" as one of the leading marriage manuals. It has been adopted as a textbook by 200 colleges and universities.

McCary and a coauthor also have written a condensed version of the Bible cutting the word count of the King James version 65 per cent. "Nothing has been left out," McCary said.

He is currently working on "Human Sex: Its Meaning and Functions." It was designed and written as a high school text, the first on the subject.

H. Ross Perot will speak at the Tech Country Club Dinner Friday night.

The Dallas billionaire and philanthropist, noted for his efforts to aid prisoners of war in North Vietnam, formed Electronic Data Systems in 1962. From an initial investment of $1000, he now owns $1,287,126,000 worth of stock in the company.

In spite of his billion, Perot's life style is modest. His wife and four children live in a comfortable, but not extravagant home and drive a 1965 Lincoln Continental and a 1959 Ford station wagon.

He intends to leave his children very little money so they can have a chance to make their own. He wants to help solve America's problems.

Elmer Dixon, Seattle Black Panther lieutenant, speaking to University of Washington students, called for revolutionary politics—putting theory into practice—in fighting the class struggle in America.

"Give freedom to the people or the country's going to be leveled," Dixon said.

He described the U.S. government as "the number one world enemy." Dixon charged the government with dealing in abstracts and political rhetoric, where its actions were not in the best interest of the people but rather for the benefit of a selected few.

When questioned as to what type of government would be initiated after a successful revolution, Dixon said, "a Yankee Doodle socialism; people will revolutionize their minds—each one according to his needs."

Over 350 Tech students became self-appointed garbage collectors Saturday representing campus organizations in Eco-Action Day. They collected over 30 tons of litter.

Those who gathered the most garbage won a pine tree to be planted wherever they desire.

Someone expressed concern over whether or not this would put full-time sanitation engineers out of work.

A forum on abortion at Washington State boiled down to rights of the fetus versus rights of the mother.

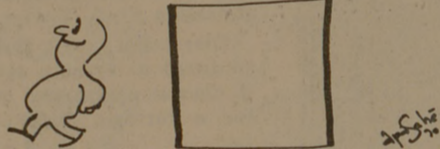

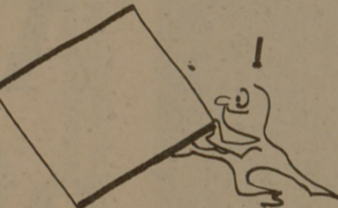

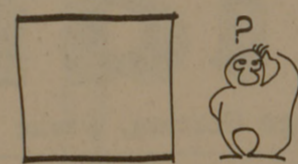

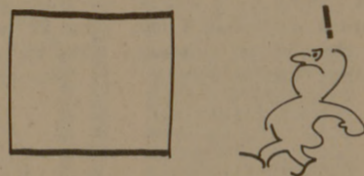

Proponents of abortion said that if the fetus has as much right as the mother, then "why not try to save all the sperms and eggs?"

Representatives from Women's Lib, Zero Population Growth and Committee for Abortion Reform also emphasized that anti-abortion laws are sexually discriminating to American women. Beth Crumb said, "Women are forced to carry unwanted babies because laws permit them no other outlet."

Opponents of abortion realize reform is necessary for protecting women, but they feel the answer is not in destroying the fetus.

Student has sympathy for paper's editor

SAN DIEGO (AP)—This letter written under obvious duress by Roger Peck, a pupil at Hale Junior High School, appeared in the San Diego Union:

"Editor, Our teacher is making us write this. I don't understand why people have to tell their gripes to you. I don't think you want to sit around and read other people's problems. You got better things to do."
