Libbers 'devout hypocrites'

"When I told my instructors my ride was leavin' early, I thought you had a car—didn't you know that I don't have a car either?"

By JAMES R. JACKSON
Most men on this campus have no doubt encountered phrases such as "male chauvinist pig" in the light of the ongoing Women's Liberation movement. If campuses could be rated on chauvinism, I am sure A&M would be first on the libbers' list. Even Maggies, so-called Liberator or not, would attest to this.
Personally, I am tired of being beat over the head with the "chauvinist pig" phrase, and I am sure most Aggies are. I am convinced that any female who thinks or proclaims she is a "liberator" is a devout hypocrite.
Consider the evidence. Have you ever met an honest to goodness liberator? I mean the fact is, all women want to be man-handled. Have you met one on this campus who doesn't? Anywhere? Brother, you never will.
This myth was sufficiently exposed in an article in the Daily Evergreen at the University of Washington recently. The author, a "male chauvinist pig" points out that most women's liberation advocates are copouts and cites identifying characteristics.

According to the article, you know it's a women's liberation copout when . . .
... you visit a mens' dorm turned coed and discover half of the stand-up urinals have been converted into floral displays.
... your girlfriend starts wearing nylons under her work pants to keep the leg-hairs from sticking through.
... she buys a steel-reinforced handbag to match her construction boots.
... she wears an asbestos Maidenform to the bra-burning.

At Texas Tech, the freaks out-scored the pigs 9-5 in a baseball game there Thursday. The atmosphere was friendly and the general attitude was one of informality.
Most of the campus police had painted pictures of pigs on their shirts, and one had printed "I'm proud to be a pig." One of the freaks had an American flag on the back of his shirt and one had a Linus shirt sporting a rather explicit phrase.

At Eastern New Mexico University a petition is circulating in an attempt to prevent Dr. Benjamin Spock from speaking on campus.
The petition reads in part, "As taxpayers we must object to using any buildings or facility paid for by the taxpayers of New Mexico for this man to present his radical beliefs to the young and impressionable of our college students."

Al Capp was specifically mentioned as being an acceptable speaker as opposed to Dr. Spock.

A University of Texas nutrition expert fed 64 laboratory rats on nothing but bread called "enriched" by commercial bakeries.
Within 90 days, 40 of the rodents had died of malnutrition.

Model Cities seminar set Friday at 1:30

The Urban Planning Department of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design will sponsor a "Model Cities" seminar at 1:30 p.m. Friday at the Memorial Student Center.
Herbert Hyman of the Urban Affairs Department at Hunter College in New York will discuss "Citizen Participation in Model Cities."
Kaleb Nelson, seminar coordinator, said Hyman has been actively involved in the "Model Cities" program since its inception in 1965. He has been working with several citizens groups in New York.
Nelson said the seminar also will include presentations by four Texas A&M urban fellows participating in "Model Cities" programs across the state.
