Editor:
The Class of '74 must develop its great potential into kinetic programs which will allow freshmen at A&M to become involved in their university and its wide range of activities. We, the Class of '74, can become one of the major elements in developing unification on campus.

We can accomplish this by transforming our ideas into realities, making use of our great potential. We can grow together to become dedicated to the ideal that we are "true to each other as Aggies can be."

In order to achieve this high degree of involvement we must cultivate a more sophisticated organization in our class structure. This could be fulfilled by advancing the freshman council, composed of representatives from each dorm. The structure is a permanent segment of the freshman class and should be utilized extensively. Better organization would occur and another means of developing leadership in A&M students would evolve.

The increase of women in our university, notably in the freshman class, proposes another facet for unification. We are now required to instigate more coeducational programs to establish a balance of relations between the men and women on campus.

This balance must occur in the freshman year to benefit the university in later years. The Class of '74 is the key factor in establishing this unification.

Prove to yourself that you want to be a part of this foundation by voting for T. Mark Blakemore, the candidate most likely to help build this foundation, on Nov. 12, 1970.

Editor:
Thursday the Class of '74 will elect class officers and student senators for this year. It is important that serious consideration be given to these elections if student government is to be truly representative of you. I am dedicated to representing your views in the Senate and would appreciate your support in this effort.

I was selected as one of 14 senate executive aides earlier this semester and have had the opportunity to work closely with the Senate since that time. I feel
