CHILDREN TAKE A LOOK at and get the feel of a city street in Fullerton, Cal., which is the first in the nation made with a new paving material composed of more than a million used glass bottles and called glasphalt. The road is in a relatively remote area and is only 600 feet long. It is made of almost the same materials used for asphalt paving, with glass substituted for gravel and stone. (AP Wirephoto)

Prosecution begins Calley court-martial

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)—An Army prosecutor began the court-martial of Lt. William L. Calley Tuesday by charging that the officer "shot down in cold blood" unarmed men, women and children at the tiny village of My Lai in 1968.

Calley, one of 10 soldiers charged with committing atrocities at My Lai, is accused of the premeditated murder of 102 civilians.

Capt. Aubrey Daniel, the prosecutor, made a 22-minute opening statement to the six court-martial board members assigned to hear the case.

Daniel said that Calley's platoon found the village undefended when the soldiers entered it on a combat mission. He said that Calley and some of his men used "full bursts of automatic fire" to shoot "unarmed and undefended men, women and children."

Calley faces death or life imprisonment if he is convicted.

Just before Daniel began his opening statement, Calley stood erect as the trial judge, Col. Reid Kennedy, asked him in a routine procedure:

"Lt. Calley, are you ready to plead?"

"I plead not guilty," Calley replied.

Then the 5 foot 3 defendant sat down and leaned forward with his elbows on the defense table.

His face appeared flushed as Daniel began his opening address.

"What did the accused do in My Lai in March 16, 1968?" Daniel, 29, asked the jury of six Army officers. "We will try to put you there . . ."

Daniel said Calley's 1st Platoon of Charlie Company was in the forefront of a helicopter assault into the area immediately west of My Lai at 7:30 a.m. that day.

"They didn't receive any fire from that village," Daniel declared. "They found the village to be undefended. They found women, they found children, they found old men, not armed. They found them in their hootchie. Some were eating breakfast."

A group of the villagers were placed in charge of two of Calley's men, Pvt. Paul Meadlo and Pfc. Dennis Conti, Daniel said. Then, referring to Calley, the prosecutor continued, "he told Conti and Meadlo, 'take care of these people.' They didn't know what the accused meant when he said, 'Take care of these people.' They didn't know he had formed his intent."

Calley stuck the tip of a yellow pencil in his mouth, his eyes riveted on Daniel's back as the prosecutor stood facing the jury across the red-carpeted courtroom across from the defense table.

"Lt. Calley returns," Daniel was saying in his even voice. "He finds Meadlo and Conti. 'Why haven't you taken care of these people?' he asks. 'We have taken care of them, we are guarding them,' he is told. Calley says, 'I mean kill 'em, waste 'em.'"

"The people were sitting on the ground, offering no resistance at all. With full bursts of automatic fire, Calley and Meadlo shot these people, these unarmed and undefended men, women and children."

"Some tried to run. They didn't make it. They were shot down dead in cold blood on that trail."

By now, Daniel said, Meadlo was weeping at the enormity of his deed and some other members of the platoon were trying to sneak away from the carnage.

Career library will be added

A career browsing library through which students may learn of prospective employers has been added to the Basic Collection of the University Library.

Library Director John B. Smith said company materials of interest to students in many disciplines are being gathered.

Robert C. Reese, university director of placement and corporate support, is cooperating in the project.

More than 150 representative publications are shelved near the newspapers and magazines sections of the basic collection on the first floor. Additional materials are being received daily in response to Placement Office letters.

Employee magazines, company career information for prospective employees, annual reports and other publications are being received. Texas oriented and national corporations in banking, industry and trade are currently represented in the career browsing library.

Materials in the collection are relatively brief and may be read easily in the library, Smith said.
