Luedecke keynotes highway course

Texas Highway Department officials were advised here Tuesday to broaden their goals to include mass transportation—even urban transportation.

R. Luedecke, A&M executive vice president, in the keynote address for the 44th annual Highway Short Course.

General Luedecke warned that the federal government will step in if state and local government does not take the lead in solving urban transportation problems.

"Using the principle you have used in providing Texans with the finest highway system in the world," he said, "it seems to me that you could use the established state-local partnership to solve the urban transportation problem fairly and in keeping with the needs of the people of Texas."

"If we don't solve our own problems," the general added, "then we had better get ready for someone else to write the rules of the ball game we are going to play by in years to come—like them or not."

General Luedecke noted that cities are hard pressed for financial resources, with limited taxing powers and a continuing demand for expanded services.

Pakistani cyclone dead above 55,000

MANPURA, East Pakistan (AP) — The great wave riding the winds of the cyclone came in at midnight with a thunderous roar. Unhindered by any dikes, it swept in a 20-foot crest across this little island in the Bay of Bengal, carrying hundreds of people out to sea.

When the wave had passed, 10,000 of Manpura's 26,000 people were dead. Of 5,000 houses, only four remained intact.

Feiveson recipient of Connor Award Alan H. Feiveson of Houston NASA statistician studying for Ph.D. degree at A&M, has named recipient of the W. Connor Award from the school Institute of Statistics.

Dr. H. O. Hartley, institute director, said the award is presented annually to the institute's outstanding doctoral candidate who completed his qualifying examinations the previous academic year.

The award honors the Dr. W. S. Connor of the faculty. Feiveson, one of 10 candidates for the award, is a native of Chicago and earned B.S. and M.S. degrees in statistics at the University of Chicago.
