Texas legislators debate conflict-of-interest measure

AUSTIN (AP)—Lawmaking took a back seat Tuesday while Texas legislators argued over what they called a "crisis in confidence" in state government.

House members scheduled a super public hearing Thursday on the session's major aims but most talk over the conflict of interest claims is stirred up by a federal stock fraud case.

Twenty legislators—18 representatives and two senators—agreed late Tuesday to make voluntary financial disclosure statements and urged the remaining 161 lawmakers to do the same.

"We are trying to restore public confidence," said Rep. Jim Earthman, Houston Republican. "This is the worst scandal that ever hit this state."

A statement from Earthman and 19 Democrats said "the integrity of the entire state government is being questioned. Seldom has outrage been so general and so vehemently expressed."

Meanwhile, Rep. Curtis Graves, Houston, who also was one of signers of the disclosure statement, had second thoughts about pushing a resolution Wednesday that would remove Speaker Gus Mutscher until the federal stock fraud case is over.

"I still may run with it,"

Graves said, "but I want to see where I am before I make a move."

Graves' resolution also would temporarily remove Reps. W. S. Healy, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and Tommy Shannon, House Administration Committee chairman. Both, along with Mutscher, have said they profited from insurance stock sales which are being questioned by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

But an attempt to debate a "conflict of interest" resolution Tuesday in the Senate died quickly. Senators voted 16-13 to send the measure to a committee for study before allowing floor debate.

"I hate to vote for anything as silly as this without reading it," said Sen. William Moore, Bryan, of the resolution by Sen. Mike McKool, Dallas. McKool asked an immediate vote. The resolution would have the Senate say it will not confirm any gubernatorial appointees to any state regulatory agency when a person has "either an open or obvious conflict of interest" or "shall be deemed unable or incapable of maintaining integrity or objectivity in fulfilling their duties."

Sen. H. J. Blanchard, Lubbock, a veteran of past Senate filibusters, promised there would be "considerable delay" if the Senate attempts to vote Tuesday on McKool's proposal.

The House Constitutional amendments committee laid out a full afternoon and night work schedule Thursday with a public hearing for five of the legislature's most important issues—all requiring a final vote by Texans to change the constitution.

One change, already approved by the Senate, would lift the $80 million ceiling on state welfare payments. Another would be the governor's proposal to issue $450 million in "free public school bonds" to be paid off by the oil and gas lease income from public school lands. A third proposal would set up a 15-member state ethics commission that would also make recommendations on legislators' pay.

Still another measure would increase the Senate from 31 to 39 members to keep some rural senators from being left out in the cold by redistricting based on 1970 census figures.

In both houses, senators and representatives continued the surge of new bills and propositions in preparation for the committee hearings just now getting underway.

Sen. Charles Wilson, Lufkin, introduced a plan to split the three-member parks and wildlife commission into a six-member parks department and a nine-member wildlife department. A similar measure has been filed in the House.
