Students favor coed living

By JAMES R. JACKSON

Separation of the sexes is unnatural, according to one woman at Washington State University. The words are indicative of the movement in favor of coed living going on among the nation's colleges.

At Washington State, where coed living has long been established, 41 residents were asked their opinions.

"It's easier to talk to guys and get their viewpoint," a woman said. "The guys are very protective," another said. A man mentioned that the women are handy for typing and mending.

"With girls around all the time you have more respect for them," one of the men said.

"People have learned sexual control. There isn't any sex on our floor unless maybe when someone's boyfriend from out-of-town comes to visit," a girl said.

"You could sum up coed living by saying that women cease to be sex objects," someone added,

X-rays biggest peace threat, specialist says

DAVIDSON, N.S. (AP) — The most serious peacetime radiation threat to Americans is not nuclear power plants but ordinary medical and dental X-rays, radiation specialist Dr. Karl Z. Morgan said Tuesday.

Medical X-rays are responsible for 3,300 deaths per year in the United States and may lead to as many as 46,000 deaths in future generations because of genetic damage, he said in an address at Davidson College.

Morgan, director of the Health Physics Division of Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee, said in contrast, that statistics indicate nuclear industries are responsible for only 18 deaths per year and may lead to 140 deaths in subsequent generations.

Morgan, editor of the Journal of Health Physics and a member of the national and international committees on radiation protection, said all evidence indicates the more dosage a person receives, the more the damage done to his body and genes.

"There can be no threshold dose so low that the probability of serious damage is zero," he said. No dosage of X-rays or any kind of radiation is completely safe, Morgan stated.

saying the women also begin to see men as people.

The University of Florida now has a "bitch booth" created by the student government.

The bitch booths, set up Jan. 12, have received the attention of many students. Bitch booths were created for airing gripes and making suggestions to inform student government of student ideas and problems.

If student response is large enough (if they bitch enough), the booths will be continued once a week.

An article in the school newspaper at Washington State brought out some of the evils of ROTC. Among them was the fact that many young men simply do not fully realize what they are getting into. Later, when they realize that ROTC is not for them, they have a very difficult time getting out.

The article stated that most men seeking to get out of ROTC are not just "draft dodgers." They include officers of military honoraries, medal winners, cadets cited for outstanding performance and so on.

"Most of them are among the brightest of the cadets. Bright enough to want out when they find out what ROTC is really all about," the article says.

According to the article, some cadets really are conscientious objectors. After two years of book learning and "Mickey Mouse" drills, their first taste of combat training comes at summer camp, when they are expected to plunge bayonets into dummies representing the enemy, shouting "kill, kill."

This one exercise alienates more cadets than any other, yet by this time, they are tied to a contract, and "the military almost owns them, body and soul."

Other disadvantages usually not told the cadet is immediate orders to active duty upon breach of contract, stricter conscientious objector procedures, fewer appeal rights, lower mental and physical in-service standards than induction standards, and no chance in the draft lottery.
