'Clear Day' a fine show

By PAT GRIMES

"On A Clear Day You Can See Forever" is primarily a showcase for the diversified talents of Miss Barbra Streisand.

As a chain-smoker and reincarnated clairvoyant with extra-sensory perception, Daisy Gamble (Barbra Streisand) faces the problem of being "healthy, well-adjusted" and having "no character."

She considers herself normal and is almost completely unaware of her multiple talents, save for knowing when the phone will ring and being able to grow flowers "fast."

As Daisy, she seeks the assistance of a hypnotist, Dr. Chabot (Yves Montand) to stop smoking. He opens the window of her past and the musical screenplay begins in brilliant color.

Flashbacks of one of 144 previous lives interweave a dramatically sad tale with her present "go-along, little nothingness life." She is the Lady Melinda Tentrees in 1814 one minute and boring Daisy the next.

A one-sided romance on her part between she and Chabot develops, but is ill fated. The pair must wait for their Virginia-based life of love until the year 2038.

Vincente Minnelli, the director, obviously gave Miss Streisand a free hand in her character portrayal. She doesn't miss a single camera angle and radiates the Streisand technique.

Yves Montand surprisingly sings quite well and his nostalgic French manner lends to a sensitive performance.

A newcomer, John Richardson as Robert Tentrees, did a very convincing job as the gigolo. Star Jack Nicholson of the hit "Five Easy Pieces," though in a minor role deserves mention for an off-beat bit of acting.

Aside from being a rather kooky yet sophisticated production "On A Clear Day..." is a fashion show for the ladies. Both Miss Streisand's current (Arnold Scaasi) and period (Cecil Beaton) costumes are eye appealing.

The musical is a study in color and particularly photographic execution as well as having several good songs in the offering.

An opening sequence of time lapse photography by John Ott is just beautiful.

The entire production will delight the romanticist and encourage the mystic.

★★★ The Circle offers "Monte Walsh" and "The Cheyenne Social Club."

Lee Marvin as Monte Walsh plays the last of a dying breed, the American cowboy.

The story is relatively sad with painful reminders of an ideal, but hard, working life.

Marvin is supported by Jeanne Moreau, giving a touching sensitivity to the saloon hooker's role, and Jack Palance. His character's transition to civilization is a heartfelt downfall to Monte.

Monte is left with his memories, a lock of auburn hair and his faithful horse.

The musical score by John Barry of "Born Free" fame was a high point for the film and partly made up for the bad screen lighting that plagues the Circle.

The two stalwarts, Henry Fonda and James Stewart, made "The Cheyenne Social Club" an enjoyable western experience.

It's funny, light-hearted entertainment and rated G for a change.
