Dr. Joel G. Rogers, seated right, and Bob Rogers discuss program development for the new PDP-15 computer at Texas A&M's Cyclotron Institute.

New computer expands A&M's Cyclotron Center

A&M's Cyclotron Institute, home of the Southwest's largest "atom smasher," has added a second computer to meet expanded research needs.

Dr. Joel G. Rogers, research associate in charge of the computer system, said the new computer is a PDP-15 manufactured by Digital Equipment Corp. of Maynard, Mass.

It will complement the IBM 7094 and gives the institute one of the best computer systems for an installation of its type.

Rogers said the 7094 will be used only for large arithmetic data processing. The PDP-15 will gather data during experiments with electronic detectors, process the data while the experiment is running and eventually store the information on magnetic tape.

The $7 million facility is one of the most sophisticated nuclear installations of its type in the nation. The particle accelerator, commonly called an "atom smasher," is used by institute researchers, several departments, medical centers and various research laboratories throughout the Southwest.

Experiments run 24 hours a day, seven days a week, Dr. Rogers noted.

"The PDP computer was chosen because of its outstanding ability to input and output data at a high rate directly from the experiment," he explained.

The two computers will be versatile and able to serve a large number of experiment groups with widely different needs. Currently the PDP is being used for program development and will be on-line for data acquisition in the near future.

Final cyclotron computer data is a set of experimental parameters which can be compared with theoretical predictions to investigate details of nuclear structure and forces, Dr. Rogers added.

Bob C. Rogers is in charge of the electronics for the computer facilities.

3 Dog Night

Contemporary Arts Committee (CAC) Chairman Robert Riggs asked the council to grant the committee use of money from their $1,500 revolving account. Riggs said the committee needs $200 for a kinetic art film and $50 a piece for film makers Ray O'Leary and Phillip Codville, who will show their films and talk about the film-making process.

"They usually do this for about $1,000," he said, "but because they are friends with a professor here, they are doing it for much less."

Even though Riggs sought a "yes" or "no" answer from the council so he could plan a brochure of CAC spring activities, and relinquish the ballroom which he has reserved for Friday nights if he is not using it, the council insisted that he present his request and financial status in writing to the council first.
