

Kent student gives warning

By JAMES R. JACKSON

A teasp who is a graduate of Kent State published his views of the May 4 tragedy there as he saw it. In an article in The Daily Texan the student said he could not help "but draw certain parallels between what I experienced in the past and what I see evolving around me today on the University of Texas campus."

The Kent graduate thinks the underlying causes of the tragedy of Kent State "was the absence of an effective dialogue between students, as well as faculty and the administration."

He said it was possible to see a member of the lower echelon of the bureaucratic structure but "any real dialogue with the decision-making apparatus was non-existent."

The student wonders where the people are that run an institution. He said he feels that they should rap and mingle with students, explaining their actions and methods to the students — the final product of the institution.

Speaking at Tech, Tom Calhoun, a promoter of nonviolence and assimilation of ethnic groups through association of all kinds of people, told what it is like to be a Negro.

He said the main cause for voluntary segregation is fear. He did not mean only black segregation. He said one could see "soul corner" where blacks meet. Another spot is used by the "freaks or long hairs" while "Chicanos, cowboys, and other groups have their own gatherings."

"Blacks do not want to be called Uncle Toms. White students fear their peers will call them 'nigger lovers,' or that the black students will look down on them as do-gooders," Calhoun said.

Speaking of the welfare program, Calhoun said it does not do an efficient job, but that it is necessary.

Calhoun said he believes the purpose of welfare should be to distribute wealth so as to guarantee each person the basic essentials (food, good shelter, clothing) of life.

He added that acceptance of assimilation is difficult for low-income white families because, "they feel failure monetarily and the black served once as someone to look down upon."

'Lights' seen by spacemen may be danger warning

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)—Mysterious lights from space which astronauts between the earth and moon see in the dark and with their eyes closed may be the warning signs for terrible dangers facing spacemen of the future.

The lights were first observed by Apollo 11 astronaut Edwin E. Aldrin Jr. as he and his crewmates were flying back from the moon. He mentioned them to astronaut Neil Armstrong who also saw them.

Apollo 12 and Apollo 13 astronauts also saw the lights, which were described as coming in streaks and bursts and faint lightning-like flashes.

Apollo 14 astronauts, for the first time, set out to carefully observe and report their observations. They reported Tuesday of seeing the lights.

Scientists believe the astronauts may be experiencing cosmic radiation hitting their eyes or optic nerves.

The scientists say the strength of the radiation is not enough to harm Apollo astronauts on short flights, such as Apollo 14.

But on longer flights, such as a two-year journey to Mars, the radiation could be harmful. Long term exposure to radiation can destroy body cells.

People on earth have nothing to fear from the rays, however.

The Van Allen radiation belt apparently shields the earth from the high energy rays observed by the astronauts.
