A play treating the concept of the shocking nature of its subject matter.

that social pressure can cause bizarre behavior in people has begun a six-night run in Bryan Gramberg, senior English major and College Station.

The play, Henrik Ibsen's "Ghosts," is a production of the Aggie Players, the A&M theater company directed by C. K. Esten.

"Ghosts" will be staged at the A&M Consolidated School's auditorium Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Thursday, Friday and Saturday performances will be at Stagecenter, in the recreation building near Country Club Lake in Bryan.

Curtain for each performance will be at 8 p.m.

Aggie Players production formerly were staged in Guion Hall. The building was razed recently to make way for a new convention center and Memorial Student Center expansion.

"Ghosts" forms an Ibsen sequel to "The Doll's House," in which a woman defied social convention play was banned in 1880 because

The "Ghosts" cast places Eva of Bryan, as Mrs. Alving, compelled by social pressure to remain with her immoral husband.

Her son Oswald, victim of the older Alving's excesses, will be played by Audie Beeson, sophomore marketing major of Tripoli, Libya. John Steele will portray Pastor Mandors from whom the social pressure becomes strongest. Sandy Sheats, junior secondary education major of Baytown, will play the widow's maid Regina. Her carpenter father, Jacob Engstrand, will be portrayed by Russell McInturff, sophomore secondary education major of Lubbock.

Admission to the play will be $1 per person.
