A&M course helps Bryan policeman advan

A special two-week police administration course at Texas A&M paved the way for a Bryan policeman's Thursday promotion.

James Barnett entered the Engineering Extension Service course as a patrolman and left Friday a sergeant.

The promotion had been pending for some time, but Sgt. Barnett believes the training has given him a head start when he reports to duty.

"There's a lot of information presented here that I never realized before," Barnett, who has three years of experience, said. "For example, I never thought of a supervisor as a teacher, but he must be. And I never took a hard look at financing a department."

Instructor Bob Austin said this is the first time the course was offered. It has been so successful the Police Training Division plans to expand it to four weeks.

"A student will only take away what he puts into the training," Austin observed. "Sgt. Barnett has put a lot into this course."

Group problem solving and discussions were emphasized.

Capt. Charles Phelps of the Bryan Department said he appreciated the group approach.

"Our sergeants play a part in staff decisions," Phelps said. "We also delegate responsibility to them, making supervisors a part of the administration team."

Barnett gave up a better paying job with Lone Star Gas Co. to enter police work full time.

He had been a reserve patrolman in Bryan for three years before he was moved by the company to Mexia as supervisor. As a reserve patrolman, Barnett spent approximately 20 hours a week on patrol, Phelps said.

The new sergeant said he missed police work, so he returned to Bryan in September 1968, to join the department at a big pay cut.

Phelps contends it was Bryan's gain.
