1971 Aggieland available in Student Publication Office

The first shipment of 1971 Aggielands arrived last Wednesday and yearbooks are available to students who paid for them during the 1970-71 academic year, announced Jim Lindsey, director of information and publications. Lindsey said approximately 5,000 yearbooks were received in the first shipment from Taylor Publishing Co. in Dallas, and another truckload arrived Tuesday.

He said students must bring their identification cards to the Student Publications Office on the second floor of the Services Building.

The 584-page yearbook is one of the largest ever assembled for Texas A&M students and includes a number of full-color pages, Lindsey said.

Editor Jerry L. Boles and his staff dedicated the 1971 issue to A. R. Luedeker, executive vice president of Texas A&M. A 1932 graduate, Luedeker served as acting president following the death of A&M President Earl Rudder last year.

Engineering plans teaching institute

A Better Teaching Institute will be conducted for interested College of Engineering faculty members, Dean Fred J. Benson announced.

The Aug. 25-26 institute will be in the CNB Room of the City National Bank in Bryan.

Talks, discussion and panels conducted by faculty from throughout the university will cover the psychology of learning, projects lab, student feedback, lecture techniques, effective media use, teaching creativity, team design projects, self-paced instruction and quizzes, exams and grading.

Sociology gets new faculty member

Dr. Albert Schaffer has been appointed to the faculty of the Sociology and Anthropology Department effective Sept. 1.

Previously at the University of Alabama, Schaffer will be a full professor in the department, announced Dr. R. L. Skrabanek, acting head.

"Dr. Schaffer will have primary responsibility in teaching and research in urban sociology," Skrabanek said. The new A&M professor also specializes in political sociology.

Schaffer, his wife Ruth and daughter moved to Bryan from Tuscaloosa earlier this summer.

His appointment brings the new Sociology and Anthropology Department faculty to 12 members, 10 of which have the Ph.D. An 11th doctorate is expected by the fall semester.

The department was organized in the College of Liberal Arts last fall, from the Agricultural Economics and Sociology Department and with the addition of anthropology. Five of the present department faculty members retain major commitment in the College of Agriculture.

Animal Science head named society chief

Dr. O. D. Butler, head of the Animal Science Department, has been elected president of the American Society of Animal Science.

The action came at the 63rd annual meeting of the organization last week at the University of California at Davis. Butler was vice president of the organization last year.

Under his leadership, A&M faculty members presented 28 research papers at this year's meeting of the 3,750-member organization.

Butler has been head of the Animal Science Department since 1956; after receiving BS and MS degrees from A&M, and his PhD from Michigan State University in 1951.

Parking permits available to staff

Members of the faculty-staff were purchasing campus parking permits for 1971-72 beginning Monday. The parking fee remains $15 for a full year.

University Police Chief Ed Powell said the permits may be obtained at his office in the YMCA Building any weekday or from a registration team which will tour the campus.

The team will operate on the following schedule: today Engineering Building; Thursday, Academic Building; Monday, Memorial Student Center; Tuesday, Services Building, and Wednesday, B&U Building.

Permits may be purchased during the entire workday at all sites except B&U, where the schedule will be 8 a. m. until noon.
