

Draft extension bill outcome uncertain

WASHINGTON (AP)—Opposing sides seemed uncertain of the outcome Wednesday as the Senate approached today's key vote on a bill combining two-year draft extension with the most costly military pay raise ever proposed. Chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., of the Senate Armed Services Committee, backed by the Pentagon's top brass, appealed to al senators not to turn their backs on the measure fashioned after weeks of debate and negotiation. The vote expected Thursday will be on a motion to table and thus kill the bill worked out over a period of five weeks by a Senate-House conference committee from separate versions previously passed by each branch. The House already has approved the bill, and Stennis said that if the Senate rejects it, the result may be no draft bill and no military pay raises this year.

The secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force dispatched a letter to all senators Wednesday saying that further delay in reviving the draft which expired

June 30 "may jeopardize beyond redemption the prospects of achieving an all-volunteer force by July 1, 1973."

Despite the pressures from the military and the administration, Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., a foe of any kind of draft-extension bill, called the outlook for the tabling motion encouraging.

Mansfield agreed with Stennis that adoption of motion would kill the bill but he said this would be followed by another motion seeking a new conference with the House and instructing the Senate conferees on key issues.

Stennis noted, however, that any instructions the Senate gave its conferees would not be binding on the House and said anyone who thinks quick agreement could be reached on a new compromise bill is dreaming.

The draft bill originally passed by the Senate includes an amendment by Mansfield declaring it to be U.S. policy to withdraw all troops from Vietnam in nine months provided American prisoners of war were released.

This is unacceptable to the administration and the House rejected it. In conference it was watered down to a declaration of the sense of Congress that U.S. military operations in Indochina should be ended at the earliest practicable date.

Mansfield told the Senate that if the compromise bill is tabled, he will seek to have Senate conferees instructed to stand by his original amendment except to cut the deadline for withdrawal by 2½ months to make up for the time that already has elapsed.

Rucker appointed head of floriculture section

Prof. Robert H. Rucker, whose goal is to make the A&M campus the botanical showplace of the state, has been named head of the Floriculture Section of the institution's Soil and Crop Sciences Department.

The appointment of Rucker, who also serves as the university's landscape architect, was announced by Dr. H. O. Kunkel, dean of agriculture.

A 1938 A&M graduate, Rucker returned to his alma mater in 1968 and immediately launched a massive landscape program leading up to the university's centennial in 1976.

While A&M's 100th anniversary is still five years away, Rucker has already been instrumental in several major beautification projects on campus. He established the Floral Test Garden, which annually attracts hosts of garden club members and other visitors from throughout the state. He also helped design the new pedestrian mall which encompasses the heart of the campus.

Prior to joining the A&M faculty-staff, Rucker was landscape architect at the University of Oklahoma and, earlier in his career, held a similar position at Baylor. He previously taught at both OU and Texas Tech.

In addition to his B.S. degree, Rucker also holds a master's from A&M and studied one summer at Harvard's Graduate School of Design. He is a registered landscape architect.
