EPA asks government to establish noise limits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency said Wednesday the federal government should establish noise limits on aircraft and other transportation equipment, construction equipment and internal combustion engines.

It was learned also Wednesday that the EPA is drafting plans to broaden the sale of lead-free gasoline.

In a report to Congress, EPA said the technology already is available to control most forms of noise but is not being applied because of "inadequate social, economic, or governmental pressures for noise abatement."

EPA said noise already is having a harmful effect on the public and will get worse unless action is taken.

"Whereas noise levels sufficient to induce some degree of hearing loss were once confined mainly to factories and occupational situations," the report said, "noise levels approaching such intensity and duration are today being recorded on city streets and, in some cases, in and around the home." Meanwhile, the EPA is drafting regulations to require the sale of unleaded gasoline at all large filling stations by the middle of 1974, a spokesman said Wednesday.

The EPA released a consultant's findings that lead-free gas is essential to meet 1975 and 1976 clean-air standards with automobile antipollution devices now being tested.

The report estimated auto antipollution devices might add anywhere from $229 to $388 in new equipment costs per vehicle, and car owners would pay a $56 to $109 per year extra in maintenance and operating costs, largely due to lower mileage per gallon.

EPA has authority to limit or ban lead in gasoline under the 1970 Clean Air Act but its proposed regulations still must be reviewed by the White House Office of Management and Budget.

Legislation to give EPA authority for noise control activities is currently pending in Congress.

EPA said its studies and public hearings in eight cities lead to "one over-riding conclusion: There is a need for improved and comprehensive efforts at all levels of government for environmental noise control."

Du Pont awards A&M $5,000 grant

Du Pont Co. has awarded A&M $5,000 to aid educational programs during 1972, President Jack K. Williams announced Wednesday.

The Chemical and Mechanical Engineering Departments each received $2,500 unrestricted grants to support teaching and research.

T. L. Cairns, chairman of Du Pont's Committee on Educational Aid, informed university officials of the grants.

Cairns pointed out Du Pont Co. gives $2.5 million to 149 colleges and universities in support of its 1972 programs.

SHOICHI YOKOI, 58, is seen at Guam Memorial Hospital in Agana Monday after he was found by two fishermen in a jungle. Yokoi, an ex-Japanese Imperial Army sergeant, is reported to have arrived on Guam with the Japanese army from Manchuria in 1943 and fled to the jungles during the American invasion in 1944. Yokoi is said to have lived on shrimp, fish and nuts. (AP Wirephoto)

Civilians may now enter ROTC program

Non-military students may now enter Air Force ROTC training in mid-program, Col. Robert F. Crossland announced.

The A&M professor of aerospace studies noted that recent Air Force regulation changes authorize concurrent enrollment in the General Military Course during this half of the 1971-72 academic year.

"It allows students to get into the AFROTC in the middle of the program," Colonel Crossland explained. "He does not have to be in the four-year or two-year program point."

The change is particularly beneficial to freshmen students who have been considering entering the AFROTC program. By current enrollment during 1972, he can qualify as a contract cadet by the junior academic year.

Library plans census seminar

A seminar on content and use of the 1970 Census Summary Tapes for Texas is set by the A&M Library on Jan. 26.

Director of Libraries John B. Smith said the 2 p.m. seminar will be in the library conference room.

The University Library has available to the university community, through the Data Processing Center, the first and third count tapes and second count file "A" of the 1970 census.

NSF gives Saving $46,100

The National Science Foundation has awarded a $46,100 grant to Dr. Thomas R. Saving, A&M economics professor, to support research entitled "The Micro Foundations of Monetary Theory."

Dr. Saving said the two-year project will involve the effects of monetary policies on the economy. It includes federal policies, bank behavior and the theory of money supply.

Dr. Saving is the author of numerous articles on monetary theory and policy. He co-authored two books, "The Foundation of Money and Banking," and "Money, Wealth and Economic Theory."

Currently, he is writing a text on macroeconomic theory.

Dr. Saving, who joined the A&M faculty in 1968, received a Ford Foundation Research Fellowship in 1970-71. He is presi-
