"IT'S SOMETHING DIFFERENT"

A matter of life

by Gordon Richardson

Misconception is one of the most human words in the English language. Think about that for a moment. Only humans can have conceptions in the first place.

And as for misconceptions... "To err is human," wrote Alexander Pope more than two centuries ago. It is, it is.

And this is as true of the business arena as it is of any other form of human endeavor.

Whatever your trade or profession, I'd be willing to bet I have at least five wrong-headed ideas about it. And these, of course, are ideas I cherish... that is, would part with only reluctantly.

And—if you'll permit—the same is true of my calling: life underwriting. Many, many people, for instance, still think life insurance is only for their beneficiaries.

That worries me. Because life insurance is for a variety of living purposes. At Provident Mutual, we design it to get kids to college, establish retirement funds, achieve legitimate tax advantages... and so on. With no obligation... just to clear up misconceptions... I'll be glad to go over a list of living purposes with you. Write to 707 University Drive Or call 846-7027.

A&M receives graduate fellowship in geology

A&M's first permanently endowed graduate fellowship in geology was presented Wednesday by Michel T. Halbouty of Houston to the Association of Former Students.

Halbouty, 1930 A&M graduate, is internationally known for his accomplishments as a geologist and petroleum engineer. He made a $25,000 gift to endow "The Michel T. Halbouty Graduate Fellowship in Geology."

Income from the endowment will provide fellowship recipients with an annual stipend to pursue graduate studies in advanced geology and research. The new fellowship will be selectively awarded to geology graduates who earned part or all of their undergraduate expenses while attending A&M and who have high scholastic grades.

In presenting the fellowship Halbouty stated, "There is no question in my mind that further excellence in education and knowledge lies in post-graduate work and studies."

"Therefore, it is for this reason I am most pleased to present the very first graduate fellowship to be established in the field of geology in this great university," Halbouty said.

Halbouty is the author of 180 technical papers and several books on petroleum geology and engineering. As a geologist and petroleum engineer, Halbouty has made numerous investigations and evaluations of oil and gas fields throughout the world.

He either discovered or is geologically responsible for new production in approximately 50 fields in the U.S., including Alaska. He is president and chairman of the board of Halbouty Alaska Oil Co., which was the first independent company to discover an Alaskan gas field.

In Harrisburg 7 trial

Motion for mistrial denied

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—Defense attorney Paul O'Dwyer, protesting the "arrogance" of paid FBI informer Boyd Douglas Jr. and the court's failure to reprimand him, said today "it is impossible for the jury to deal fairly" with the Harrisburg 7 conspiracy trial defendants.

O'Dwyer's motion for a mistrial, however, was swiftly rejected by U.S. District Court Judge R. Dixon Herman without comment.

It was a renewal of a similar plea made Tuesday by O'Dwyer who accused the judge of prejudice.

Specifically, in his written motion, O'Dwyer objected to "the protective attitude of the court towards the witness and the court's interjection into the cross-examination, which could only be described as paternalism."

Douglas, a 31-year-old ex-convict, started his seventh day in the witness box as the government's star witness.

O'Dwyer said Douglas' "arrogance... gave him carte blanche to engage in quarrelsome dialogue with counsel and to usurp the function of the court in making what could be regarded as judicial rulings."

O'Dwyer's emotional outburst Tuesday brought charges that Herman was protecting Douglas from answering damaging defense questions aimed at destroying his credibility.

Bell Wiley will present graduate lecture Monday

Dr. Bell I. Wiley, Candler Professor of History at Emory University, will present a graduate lecture at A&M Monday.

Dr. Wiley, who TAMU President Jack K. Williams studied under as a graduate student, will discuss "The Changing South, 1930-1972," at 8 p.m. in the Memorial Student Center Assembly Room.

The public-free lecture is jointly sponsored by the Graduate College and Phi Alpha Theta, national honorary fraternity in history. Dr. Wiley, author of nine books and editor of 14 other volumes, is best known for his accomplishments as a scholar of the South and the Civil War. His books include "Southern Negroes, 1861-1865," "The Life of Johnny Reb: The Common Soldier of the Confederacy," "The Life of Billy Yank: The Common Soldier of the Union," "The Plain People of the Confederacy," and "The Road to Appomattox."
