

Martin twisted Moody Foundation report, 'secret' witness claims

HOUSTON (AP) — A man described as the secret witness in the case of the late W. L. Moody Jr., a grandson of the late W. L. Moody Jr., told newsmen Tuesday that two officials of the foundation had paid him $3,500 for a notarized statement.

John B. Phelps, a New York City attorney, said he had written the statement in such a manner as to form an attack against Shearn Moody Jr., a grandson of the late W. L. Moody Jr.

Phelps denied that he had lied but said, "My statements were put in the language they wanted."

He said he first received $500 in May, 1971, from Richard Keeton, member of a Houston law firm that represents the foundation. He said this payment was made after a five-hour session during which the notarized statement was prepared. He said Paul Haas of Corpus Christi, then chairman of the foundation's trustees, later gave him four cash payments totaling $3,000.

The charges brought quick denials from Haas, Keeton and Martin.

Haas said Phelps had requested funds from him numerous times but that he had refused all the requests. He said Keeton had paid Phelps $500 for expenses and loss of time in traveling to Houston to make the statement.

"What the man has said is a lie," Keeton said, adding that he believes Cohn's strategy is aimed at hurting Martin's campaign for re-election.

Haas indicated agreement at a news conference when he was asked if Cohn and Shearn Moody Jr. were trying to hurt Martin politically.

"It is my opinion, but I have no proof, that they are helping Mr. Hill," Haas said.

John Hill, a Houston lawyer, is one of Martin's opponents in the May 6 Democratic primary.

Martin said Cohn's charges are an attack on the integrity of Wilmer Hunt, retired Houston civil district judge who prepared the report on the foundation.

"Regardless of any wild charges, desperation tactics or half truths Cohn may spread, the Hunt report is the only complete and objective investigation of the Moody Foundation and I am proud to stand behind it," Martin said.

Haas said he did not know until Tuesday that Phelps once had received a four-year probation sentence for interstate transportation of forged documents. Phelps had said he entered a plea of guilty to such a charge in 1966.

Cohn said Phelps contacted him last Tuesday after having talked with Haas about $15,000 needed "to go into a little business." Cohn said Haas had told Phelps such a matter could not be discussed until after an anticipated favorable court ruling in a controversy over trustees of the foundation.

Haas distributed copies of a handwritten letter which he said Phelps had addressed to him and had delivered to Keeton upon arriving in Houston last Tuesday. Haas said that upon advice of counsel "certain statements against Shearn Moody Jr. and Roy Cohn" had been deleted from the copies of the letter.

The letter described Haas as "just and honorable in executing your duties as trustee of the Moody Foundation." After a deleted section, the letter continued "I feel you have witnessed enough of Mr. Moody Jr.'s actions to agree with me at least in your own private thoughts."

A&M receives $62,400 grant for fellowships

The U. S. Office of Education has awarded A&M a second grant of $62,400 to extend through the 1972-73 fiscal year for 16 graduate fellowships in the Professional Leadership Development Program for Vocational Educational Personnel.

The first year of the multi-year program is jointly sponsored by USOE and the Texas Education Agency.

Dr. Raymond P. Perkins, program coordinator, said the latest grant brings the total USOE funding to $124,800. He anticipates a matching grant will be provided later through TEA's Occupational and Technical Education Division.

Dr. Perkins pointed out TAMU is preparing individuals for specific roles in vocational education where specialization is needed. The current program is concentrating on training graduates for a broad-based background in comprehensive vocational education programs.

Fellowship students will probably become administrators who design and direct programs in junior colleges, universities, technical institutes, high schools and industries, Dr. Perkins said.

The entrance fee is $1 with an activity card and $2 without it.

The tournament is sponsored by the MSC Recreation Committee to promote bridge at A&M and to start a bridge committee.
