Texarkana prisoners end strike

TEXARKANA, Tex. (AP) — Warden L. M. Connett said Wednesday that operations at the Federal Correctional Institution were back to normal following the end of a four-day inmate strike.

Connett said inmates and prison staff were discussing complaints. About 500 of the inmate population of 575 went on a "no-eat, no-work" strike Sunday morning. Connett said almost all of the inmates ate chicken dinner Tuesday night and had breakfast at the institution Wednesday.

He said one of the most frequently mentioned of the inmate complaints was that the number of case workers was insufficient.

The prison staff numbers 175 persons, of whom six are case workers. A caseworker, Connett said, is part of six multimember teams that work with inmates to determine his housing, whether he belongs in this particular institution, what type of training and counseling is needed, what degree of supervision would be advisable, and so on.

"However, of the 175 employees, 161 are paid for their ability to counsel, advise and evaluate these people," Connett said. "It's not a case of there just being five or six people as the only ones who have concern."

He said inmates had complained about educational, medical and dental programs at the institution, but that he was unable to pinpoint any particular area of complaint. "I think everybody has his own idea," Connett said.

"They have varying numbers of requests," Connett said. "We certainly share this concern. We hope to work out individual problems as best we can, but some are not in our purview, and naturally we'd like to have more resources."

He said the prison budget for the current fiscal year was $2.4 million. That includes, he said, small amounts of income the prisoners receive from the manufacture of furniture, a tire recapping operation and some farm operations.

A dozen inmates were sent from the institution to other federal prisons Tuesday morning in an attempt to return the situation to normal, Connett said.

Legislators unsure if Nixon will continue Viet withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican congressional leaders emerged from a two-hour meeting with President Nixon today and said "we honestly don't know" whether Nixon will continue withdrawal of U.S. forces from Vietnam after May 1.

Senate GOP leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania also said Ambassador William J. Porter, chief U.S. negotiator in the suspended Paris peace talks, would have a statement on the negotiations "before long."

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Porter "is not going to move away from United States policy." He again accused the Communists of failing to show an interest in serious negotiations.

Nixon has said he will make another announcement concerning withdrawals by May 1. According to his timetable, U.S. troop strength in Vietnam will be at 69,000 men on that date.

House Republican Leader Gerald Ford, of Michigan, one of 20

Congress members attending the meeting in the Cabinet Room, reported that Nixon has made no decision on whether withdrawals would continue after May 1.

"The situation will be analyzed when we get down to the commitment of 69,000," Ford said. Ford said there has never been a commitment that withdrawals would continue.

Scott would not elaborate on Porter's planned statement and Ziegler would give little indication of what its contents might be.

The press secretary said Porter may be returning to Paris within the next few days and that any pronouncement would come from him in the French capital.

Ziegler said Porter's statement would not be related to the French government plea today that the U.S. and Communist negotiators resume the talks Nixon ordered suspended two weeks ago.

The North Vietnamese have called, too, for the United States and South Vietnam to return to the table.

Aircraft will be displayed at Easterwood by Army

An Army aviation display will be at Easterwood Field Friday afternoon in conjunction with the Army ROTC flight program at A&M.

Col. Thomas R. Parsons said the 1 to 5 p.m. static display will be open to the public and TAMU personnel as well as Army cadets interested in the program.

Planes in the display will include the OV-1 Mohawk and UH-1H Huey and AH-1 Cobra helicopters. The Army III Corps at Fort Hood will provide the aircraft.

Army cadets who participate in the flight program receive preliminary flight and ground training, upon which the military builds in active duty training. Consisting of 36½ hours instruction, the flight program can lead to a private flying license at the individual's choice, Colonel Parsons said.

Davidson to receive donation for $15,900

Dr. James Davidson, assistant professor of nuclear engineering at A&M, has received a grant involving an effort to build a new kind of nuclear reactor.

The grant for $15,900 is entitled "Plasma Diffusion in Asymmetric Toroidal Geometries and its Effect on Blanket Design."
